The children were astonished...but little do they know, Devon will be volunteering with us regularly! We are Glad to have his support and that he is giving back to our community."

EVOLUTION NOT REVOLUTION...

On Jan. 14, 2016, the Giants named Ben McAdoo the 17th head coach in franchise history. During his introductory press conference, McAdoo provided his vision for a winning football team, which focuses on Four Elements of Championship Football: (1) Strong leadership, (2) Talented men and women of integrity, (3) A positive work environment, and (4) Comprehensive structure and function. He set a clear goal for the 2016 season. "The vision for this football team goes into winning and putting that fifth Lombardi trophy in the case, said McAdoo. That is our goal and that is the vision. To accomplish that, four things need to take place, four elements."

T.C. Time

During his 12-year tenure as coach, Tom Coughlin famously kept the clocks at the team's headquarters — first in Giants Stadium, and most recently in the Quest Diagnostics Training Center — five minutes fast. McAdoo operated under that time system for two years, and he's not about to change it.

"Tom made a big impact in my life as a coach and as a person, and his discipline, punctuality and success are obviously legendary, said McAdoo. "We have our digital clocks, they're all five minutes fast, and we're going to stick with that. That's T.C. time, that's a part of the Giants culture now. Being five minutes ahead of schedule is very valuable."

GIANTS COACHING FACTS

YOUTHFUL COACHES

Although Ben McAdoo is just 39, he is not one of the five youngest coaches in Giants history, according to the Elias Sports Bureau. The five youngest coaches in Giants history are: LeRoy Andrews, Bob Folwell, Steve Owen, Ray Perkins and Allie Sherman. When the Giants opened their season on Sunday, Sept. 11, McAdoo was 39 years and 66 days old. The last time someone younger than McAdoo coached the Giants was on Dec. 21, 1980, when Ray Perkins was 39 years and 15 days old, the day he concluded the second of his four seasons as the team's head coach. The chart below shows the three youngest coaches currently coaching in the NFL.

1. Adam Gase Miami 38 3/9/78
2. Ben McAdoo NY Giants 39 7/9/77

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Each week Giants players are asked a question about themselves. This week, we asked, "Growing up, which teacher or coach made the greatest impact on you and why?"

WR Odell Beckham Jr.: Coach Nelson Stewart at my high school. He was a good person and the first coach I had a relationship with. He helped me transition into manhood.

CB D. Rodgers-Cromartie: My 11th grade math teacher, Mrs. French. I was always the guy that sat in the back of the classroom and she made me sit in the front. She would always pick on me to answer questions and that forced me to be prepared, which taught me to always be prepared in life.

WR Sterling Shepard: My high school football coach, Jay Norvell, because he taught me the little things about the game and taught me how to be a man.

CB Eli Apple: My high school principal, Mr. Tull. I would always have nice conversations with him and he was like a second father to me. He was always on me and made me do my school work.

INSIDE THE SERIES HISTORY

By Michael Eisen
November 4, 2012

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The Giants have long owned the fourth quarter, but on November 4th, the Pittsburgh Steelers stole it from them.

After entering the final quarter with a 10-point lead, the Giants gave up two touchdowns and went three-and-out on all three of their offensive possessions and lost, 24-20, in MetLife Stadium.

The defeat ended the Giants' four-game winning streak and left them at 6-3 heading into the following week's game in Cincinnati.

The Giants hoped to put a triumphant end to a difficult and emotional week as they sought to honor those suffering in the wake of Hurricane Sandy. They held a "Salute to Service" game and welcomed 150 servicemen and women and 100 first responders. But they fell flat in the game.

The Giants struggled on offense all day. They gained only 182 yards (their lowest total since the 2009 season finale at Minnesota, including 68 on the ground. Eli Manning completed only 10 of 24 passes for 125 yards. The Giants converted only two of 10 third down opportunities.

In the fateful fourth quarter, the Giants ran nine plays and gained a total of eight yards.

The defense surrendered 158 rushing yards, including 147 by Isaac Redman. The special teams surrendered kickoff returns of 68 and 50 yards, plus a 63-yard punt return.

Coughlin was also angered by sloppy play. In the second quarter, consecutive false start penalties by Martellus Bennett and David Diehl cost the Giants 10 yards on a possession that ended with Lawrence Tynes coming up short on a 51-yard field goal attempt. In the fourth quarter, the Giants stopped Pittsburgh on a third-and-seven. The Steelers would have likely have attempted a tying field goal. But Jayron Hosley was offside, giving Pittsburgh another chance at third-and-two. The Steelers converted and two plays later, Redman scored the winning touchdown on a one-yard run with 4:02 left.

The Steelers had a chance to tie the game with 10:30 remaining in the fourth quarter, when Suisham lined up to attempt a gimme 20-yard field goal. But Pittsburgh tried to fool the Giants with a fake as holder Drew Butler flipped the ball over his head to Suisham, who was tackled at the four-yard line by Michael Coe.

But instead of capitalizing and gaining momentum from the curious call, the Giants gained only three yards on their next series. They gave the ball back to Pittsburgh in less than two minutes at the Steelers' 49-yard line. On second-and-goal after Hosley's penalty, Redman rammed his way over right tackle for the game-clinching touchdown that gave the Steelers a 24-20 lead.

QUOTABLES

On Landon Collins'...

"The one guy that I'm really excited about is Landon Collins. He has been absolutely terrific. He is a guy that no one is really paying attention to, but with his stats, I think he should be Defensive Player of the Year right now."

- NBC Analyst & former NFL safety Rodney Harrison

On Will Tye's Performance...

"Will has done a great job. He's a smart football player, he's competitive and one of the things that he's done a great job for us is the production after the catch. It's not always flashy but it seems like he'll catch that four or five-yard short route and next thing you know, it's a gain of 12 or 13. I think if he continues to work hard on the blocking aspect of things, and he's showing some improvement there, but I think he's responded well."

- Offensive Coordinator Mike Sullivan

On Victor Cruz's Natural Talent...

"He's doing a good job of making plays. Just doing some things, scramble drills and finding catches in zones and working second windows. Just those things that are hard to teach. He does them naturally. It's good to have that veteran guy that you can go to in situations of the game."

- QB Eli Manning

On the Weekly Improvement of the Defense...

"We are improving week in and week out, and it's always going to be a defensive mindset in our game plan because everyone is coming to play against us. We have to continue to do what we do on the back end defensive-wise."

- CB Janoris Jenkins

On Olivier Vernon and Jason Pierre-Paul...

"They're as good as we've seen and we get that. They're talented, they're both pass rushers and they know how to get to the quarterback. They also play the run pretty dang well. So they're complete football players and it is a tremendous challenge."

- Cleveland Browns Head Coach Hue Jackson

On What He's Seen From Odell Beckham Jr....

"I see a complete receiver. He has great hands. He runs all of his routes; he is a really, really good route runner. One thing that he does really well is he adjusts to the ball in the air, elite. He is just a complete receiver who can make all of the plays and make all of the catches."

- Cleveland Browns CB Joe Haden

On Eli Manning's Consistency...

"I think he's playing extremely well. He's one of the reasons that they have the record that they have at (8-3). We're talking about a guy who's a Super Bowl-winning quarterback, who's won a lot of games in his career and started a lot of games, so he knows how to play. I think his team also knows how to play with him and I think that's really important."

- Cleveland Browns Head Coach Hue Jackson

COACHES COMPARISON

BEN McADOO
NFL Record: 8-3 (Overall)
NFL Head Coach: 1st Year

Ben McAdoo succeeded Tom Coughlin as the Giants 17th head coach on Jan. 14, 2016. McAdoo spent the 2014 and 2015 seasons as the Giants offensive coordinator.

While in his role as offensive coordinator, the Giants offense was ranked 10th and eighth in the past two seasons, respectively, in the NFL. They averaged 367.2 and 372.3 total yards, 100.2 and 100.6 rushing yards, and 267.0 and 271.7 passing yards. The Giants' passing yardage total was the seventh highest in the league last season. They were also seventh in 2014, when they averaged 267.0 yards through the air. The Giants' point totals were 380 in 2014, and 420 in the 2015 season.

The Giants' 420 points was the fifth-highest total in franchise history, and their 5,952 net yards was the third-highest total. The 2015 Giants set franchise records for pass attempts (623) and completions (392), beating the previous seasons record of 383. Their completion percentage of 62.9 was tied for the second-highest in team history; the record of 63.1 was set in 2014, McAdoo's first season with the team.

Before joining the Giants, McAdoo spent eight years as an assistant coach with the Green Bay Packers, the first six as the team's tight ends coach and the final two as the quarterbacks coach.

During his tenure in Green Bay, the Packers earned six playoff berths, won four NFC North titles and defeated Pittsburgh in Super Bowl XLV.

MIKE TOMLIN
NFL Head Coach: 10th Year

Mike Tomlin was named the 16th head coach in Pittsburgh Steelers history on January 22, 2007. Hired at the age of 34, Tomlin became only the third head coach hired by the Steelers since 1969.

Through nine seasons, Tomlin has accomplished many things that have never been done in the team's storied history. His 92-52 regular-season record (.639) is the best start in franchise history, and he became the youngest head coach in NFL history to both coach in and win a Super Bowl when he led the Steelers to a 27-23 victory over the Arizona Cardinals in Super Bowl XLIII (26 years, 323 days). By winning the Super Bowl in only his second season as a head coach, he also became the fastest to win a Super Bowl title in Steelers history.

Over the past three seasons, Tomlin has led the team to an 11-2 record in the month of December/January.

In his nine years as head coach of the Steelers, Tomlin has led Pittsburgh to four AFC North titles, most recently in 2014, and has guided the Steelers to the playoffs six times, including two trips to the Super Bowl (XLIII and XLV). Tomlin has won at least five home games in each of his first nine years, including six at Heinz Field in 2015.

Tomlin has sent a total of 36 selections to the NFL's annual Pro Bowl, including three following the 2015 season. Additionally, Tomlin was appointed by Commissioner Roger Goodell to the NFL's Competition Committee in March, 2013.

FAST 5: DAMON HARRISON

GET TO KNOW

DAMON HARRISON

Q: What do you miss most about your home state of Louisiana?

A: The food. That's the biggest part of Louisiana's culture, the food. Everybody claims they can cook, which for the most part they can. It's food that you can't get anywhere else; it can't be replicated.

Q: What has been the toughest part of transitioning from the Jets to the Giants?

A: Coming to work every day and seeing MetLife. We practice on Saturday and I see the stadium lit-up green, and I'm just reminded every day and everywhere I go that I'm still close to where I was at the beginning of my career.

Q: What is your favorite thing to do in New York City?

A: I like to go restaurant hopping. I never go to the same one, but Del Frisco's has been my favorite so far.

Q: What do you feel is your best quality?

A: My friendliness and how relatable I am to people. For some reason, people find me easy to talk to and approachable.

Q: Which teammate do you get along with the best?

A: I can't really say one person. I would have to say the dynamic between Johnathan Hankins, Jason Pierre-Paul, Olivier Vernon, Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie, Odell Beckham Jr. and John Jerry. I can't pick one person.

GIANTS AT COWBOYS SEPTEMBER 11, 2016 GIANTS 20, COWBOYS 19

This year, the Giants were on the right side of a season-opening one-point game in AT&T Stadium.

The Giants began the Ben McAdoo era Sunday with a pulsating 20-19 triumph over the Dallas Cowboys, a game that was not decided until time expired on the home team as it desperately tried to get off one final snap. The victory was particularly sweet for the Giants, who exactly 52 weeks earlier lost a 27-26 decision here on a touchdown with just seven seconds remaining.

"I thought they played with good discipline and poise," said McAdoo, who became the first Giants coach in eight tries to beat Dallas in a season opener. "They hung in there. We talk about just finding a path to victory. It all doesn't have to look great. There are a bunch of different ways you can find it. They hung in there and did that this afternoon."

"This is big," said quarterback Eli Manning, who threw three touchdown passes. "Big win for this team and the guys that were here last year. Almost a year ago today in the same spot, we had a chance to win and couldn't pull it out. We were down and to score from an offensive standpoint to take the lead, and then for our defense to get two more stops and hold on to that lead, it's big for this team moving forward. It's a big help."

The drama was further enhanced by the man who scored the game-winning touchdown. Victor Cruz, playing in his first game in 700 days (since Oct. 12, 2014), caught Manning's three-yard pass with 6:15 remaining. It was Cruz's first touchdown since Sept. 21, 2014 vs. Houston, and his first vs. the Cowboys since Sept. 8, 2013.

In the end, it was the defense that came up big. Dallas gained just 12 more yards than the Giants, despite running 21 more plays and owning a 13½-minute time of possession advantage.

"It was great to see the defense get a stop there at the end," McAdoo said. "They battled all night. They played a lot of plays tonight and they fought through it."

GIANTS VS. SAINTS SEPTEMBER 18, 2016 GIANTS 16, SAINTS 13

MetLife Stadium became home to the Theater of the Bizarre when the Giants hosted the New Orleans Saints on Sunday, until Victor Cruz proved that his new normal is just as good as his old.

The Giants lost fumbles on three consecutive possessions for the first time since 1983. Their only two sacks of Drew Brees were recorded by defensive backs (Landon Collins and Leon Hall) who had never before had their names next to that stat line – and Hall is in his 10th NFL season. The Giants' only touchdown was scored by Janoris Jenkins on a 65-yard return of a blocked field goal, the Giants' first such score since 2008. Josh Brown, who missed just two of 32 field goal attempts in 2015, was wide left on his first try of the season (it was from 53 yards, but Brown was 3-for-3 from long distances last year).

Perhaps most unusual was the final score. The Giants-Saints rivalry had become synonymous with shootouts. The average score of their last four meetings had been 51-32, including a 52-49 Saints victory last year in the Superdome. But this one ended 16-13 when Brown booted his third field goal, a 23-yarder, as time expired.

The Giants, who won at Dallas in their opener, improved to 2-0 for the first time since 2009 as Ben McAdoo joined Joe Alexander (1926) and Dan Reeves (1993) as the only head coaches in Giants history to win their first two games as the franchise's head coach.

"These last two games are very similar to the start of last year, and obviously the finishes are what the difference is," said quarterback Eli Manning, recalling that the Giants lost late leads and fell to Dallas and Atlanta to start the 2015 season. "We are able to find ways to make the plays that we need in crucial moments and a great job of guys making plays and communicating on the sideline."

No one made a bigger play than Cruz. On third-and-eight from the New Orleans 36-yard line with 1:32 remaining, he outmuscled rookie cornerback Ken Crawley for a Manning pass down the right sideline. The 34-yard gain enabled Manning to take a knee three times before Brown's deciding field goal attempt, which was 10 yards shorter than an extra point.

"We didn't want to give Drew (Brees) the ball back," McAdoo said. "He is a heck of a player, a future Hall of Famer, and if you can end the game with a kick, you end the game."

GIANTS VS. REDSKINS

SEPTEMBER 25, 2016

GIANTS 27, REDSKINS 29

The first defeat of the Ben McAdoo era was the kind of punch to the gut that the Giants have absorbed far too frequently in recent seasons.

The Giants lost to the Washington Redskins, 29-27, under a cloudless sky in MetLife Stadium. They owned leads of 11 points in the first quarter and 12 in the second, but fell when Dustin Hopkins kicked his fifth field goal, a 37-yarder with 1:51 remaining in the game.

What most pained the Giants was their belief that the defeat was self-inflicted. They committed three turnovers, including two Eli Manning interceptions, and had just one takeaway, their first of the season. The Giants were flagged for 11 penalties, including one by rookie Andrew Adams that nullified a blocked punt in the fourth quarter. Center Weston Richburg was ejected for twice committing unsportsmanlike conduct penalties.

"They were a more disciplined football team than we were today," McAdoo said. "Minus-two in the turnover ratio. Way too many penalties."

Despite all the negative occurrences, the Giants had a chance to drive down the field and pull the game out after Hopkins' field goal. But Manning was intercepted by rookie linebacker Su'a Cravens with 1:02 remaining, ending their chance to start 3-0.

"When you get penalties and you get a player ejected, that's not good," Manning said. "We're not doing our job. We can't afford to do that. We can't afford to get out of our zone. When we're doing good things, when we're playing and we got an opportunity to extend the lead and I don't know what happened. Just too many self-inflicted mistakes that put us in bad positions."

"We beat ourselves today, 100 percent," guard Justin Pugh said. "We could go out there and play this team, I'll play them right now. We beat ourselves. We hurt ourselves."

GIANTS AT VIKINGS

OCTOBER 3, 2016

GIANTS 10, VIKINGS 24

Eli Manning played in his 200th NFL game, including playoff contests, Monday night. In his 13 seasons, the best quarterback in Giants history has learned to analyze and dissect a game as well as anyone. And his evaluation of the team's performance against the Minnesota Vikings was spot on.

"Offensively, we have to be better and score more points," Manning said. "Plain and simple. We're doing some good things, but not good enough, efficient enough. We have to put it all together."

They were unable to do that on Monday night, when they lost to the Minnesota Vikings, 24-10, in brand new and extremely loud U.S. Bank Stadium. A second consecutive loss dropped the Giants to 2-2, while Minnesota improved to 4-0.

The Giants had two turnovers, punted six times (five in the first half), and committed eight penalties. They were a combined two-for-14 on third and fourth-down conversion attempts. Manning completed only one pass longer than 20 yards, and though he lines up with dynamic wide receivers in Odell Beckham Jr. (who had a career-low 23 receiving yards), Victor Cruz and Sterling Shepard, his two longest completions were to running back Paul Perkins and tight end Will Tye. Most importantly, they scored just one touchdown, and that occurred early in the fourth quarter on Orleans Darkwa's 1-yard run. Josh Brown added a 40-yard field goal.

"(We had trouble) just getting into a rhythm," Cruz said. "We couldn't get ourselves going until later in the game. We just have to figure out how to get into a rhythm a little bit quicker, that's all."

The Vikings' defensive focus was to prevent the three wide receivers from hurting them with big plays, and it worked. Cruz, Beckham and Shepard combined to catch 12 passes for 103 yards, an average of just 8.6 yards.

"They played a lot of safety over the top, cover everything underneath," Beckham said. "They covered the single side, safety rolling to the single side. All-in-all they are a great team. They have always been a great team. I guess they just came out and they played Minnesota Vikings defense. They made it difficult for us."

"They played a lot of two-high man coverage," coach Ben McAdoo said. "They played a lot of double teams. ... We have to find the one-on-one coverage." Asked if the Giants did that, McAdoo said, "I think we struggled finding the one-on-one. It reflects in our completion percentage (which was 55.6 percent as Manning hit 25 of a season-high 45 passes)."

GIANTS AT PACKERS

OCTOBER 9, 2016

GIANTS 16, PACKERS 23

Ben McAdoo was confident the Giants' offense was ready to break out. But the Green Bay Packers – with their suffocating, league-best run defense and persistent pass rush, forced the unit to consistently break down Sunday night.

Limited to one touchdown and posting some unsightly offensive numbers, the Giants lost to the Packers in Lambeau Field, 23-16. The Giants dropped to 2-3 with their third consecutive defeat, while Green Bay improved to 3-1.

"We didn't block well enough, didn't make enough throws or contested catches," McAdoo said. "We need to play better. Need to execute better."

"We just need to do more," said wide receiver Odell Beckham, Jr., who scored the team's only touchdown, and his first of the season, with 2:54 remaining. "On offense we need to sustain drives and be more than one-dimensional."

A brief rundown of the numbers: for the third time in five games, the Giants scored no more than one offensive touchdown. They finished with season-low totals of 219 yards and 14 first downs, and were four-for-13 on third-down conversion attempts. They did not snap the ball in the red zone until their eighth possession, one of just two times they traveled inside the 20-yard line. Eli Manning completed barely 50 percent of his passes (18 of 35) for 199 yards, his first sub-200 game since Oct. 25, 2015. He was also sacked three times, including one on which he lost a fumble that led to a Green Bay field goal on the final play of the first half.

"The pocket was hot tonight," McAdoo said.

The ground game was not. The Giants rushed for 43 yards on 15 attempts, a 2.9-yard average. The latter figure can be considered a minor triumph, because Green Bay entered the game allowing league-leading averages of 42.7 rushing yards a game and 1.8 yards a carry. Bobby Rainey led the Giants with just 22 yards.

"They had a good game plan," Manning said of the Packers. "They did a good job trying to take away our receivers and force us to run the ball. They did a good job of disguising a few things. They played well. They got good pressure just bringing four guys a lot of times. We had some opportunities, missed a few throws, didn't capitalize on a few opportunities, had some guys open. Unfortunately, just didn't score when we got down in the red zone enough."

"Their D-line is very good, and they hustle," guard Justin Pugh said. "Those guys never quit on a play. We had to match that intensity tonight. I think we did some good things. Obviously, we didn't run the ball well enough. We have to get back and definitely take a hard look at this tape. See where we can get better at. We're close."

GIANTS VS. RAVENS

OCTOBER 16, 2016

GIANTS 27, RAVENS 23

The legend of Odell Beckham, Jr. added another remarkable chapter on Sunday.

He lost a fumble on the Giants' first offensive play of the Giants home game against the Baltimore Ravens. In the second quarter, Beckham suffered a hip pointer that left him lying on his stomach after an incomplete pass and required a visit to the training room for an examination. He finished the half with two catches for 11 yards. While he was out of action, his replacement, rookie Roger Lewis, Jr., scored a touchdown on his first career reception.

So naturally, Beckham took matters into his own hands — and legs — in the second half despite a hip that, “was bothering me all game.” He caught six more passes for 211 more yards, including touchdowns of 75 and 66 yards, the latter on a fourth-and-one with 1:24 remaining to give the Giants a dramatic come-from-behind 27-23 victory over the Ravens in MetLife Stadium.

The Giants are 3-3 after breaking their 3-game losing streak.

Early in the season, Beckham was generating attention for penalties and confrontations with cornerbacks. Now he's back to doing what he does best, making big plays when the Giants must have them and thrilling fans in the stadium and television viewers around the country.

“That’s what we expect him to do,” said Eli Manning, who threw for 403 yards and three touchdowns while winning his 100th regular-season game and tossing his 300th career touchdown pass. “We got some looks that we wanted. We were able to get to a couple plays that we’ve kind of had on the shelf for a few weeks, we just never quite got the looks that we wanted to get to them. Today, we got some of those and converted on them. It was good to see him make some bigtime plays in crucial moments. There’s nothing better than just catching a slant and going (66) yards for a touchdown to get the game-winning play.”

“There’s going to be a lot more downs and a lot more ups,” said Beckham, who finished with eight catches for 222 yards, the second-highest single-game total in Giants history. “Collectively as a team, we fought today for every bit of it. First play, come out, fumble. What are we going to do now? How are we going to overcome adversity? We did that. Now you just have to keep building on it. We’ve had some tough losses. There’s definitely going to be things to correct from this film and things to watch. You just keep it moving.”

That’s what the Giants had to do all day. They fell behind 10-0 early and trailed by three points at halftime. Despite his productivity, Manning threw two interceptions. The Giants rushed for only 38 yards.

GIANTS VS. RAMS (LONDON)

OCTOBER 23, 2016

GIANTS 17, RAMS 10

Given the events of Sunday afternoon in Twickenham Stadium, a more appropriate dateline for this story would be LONDON.

Giants safety Landon Collins made the game's most influential plays, and was the best player on the field, as the Giants once again made themselves feel right at home in England with a 17-10 victory over the Los Angeles Rams. The Giants improved to 4-3 at the bye with their second straight victory – and second in as many visits to London, where they beat Miami nine years ago.

Rashad Jennings' 1-yard touchdown run with 9:23 remaining was the game-winner – as well as the only points scored in the second half – but it was Collins, the second-year safety, who left the largest imprint on the game.

With the Giants trailing, 10-3, in the second quarter, Collins intercepted a Case Keenum pass that was tipped by intended receiver Tavon Austin and willed his way 44 yards down the field and across the goal line for the game-tying score. It was his first touchdown since his sophomore season at the University of Alabama, when he scored on an interception return at Tennessee.

"(I feel) fantastic," Collins said. "I mean, my first career touchdown in the NFL. Fantastic. A memory I never want to forget. Definitely a game-changing moment for the team. Got the ball back and changed momentum."

But Collins wasn't finished. In the fourth quarter, he picked off another Keenum throw to Austin. He returned that one 18 yards to the Los Angeles 35. Six plays later, Jennings gave the Giants a lead that held up to the end of the game.

When he wasn't picking off passes, Collins was flattening any Rams player who had the misfortune to find the ball in his hands. He led all players with eight solo tackles, most of the jarring variety.

By many measures, this was a bizarre game for the Giants. The defense that finished 32nd in the NFL last season controlled an opponent with an impressive collection of weapons, on a day when the Giants' offense sputtered throughout.

"We try to be top 10 in the NFL in defense," Collins said. "It (was) 32, and we try to make a big difference from that standpoint."

The Giants entered the game with three takeaways in six games, and a minus-10 turnover differential that was the league's second worst. They reversed field with four interceptions (including Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie's two in the end zone on the Rams' final two possessions) and a healthy plus-3 differential.

GIANTS VS. EAGLES NOVEMBER 6, 2016 GIANTS 28, EAGLES 23

Ben McAdoo doesn't want to reflect on the Giants' 2015 season. He doesn't want to talk about it. And he certainly doesn't want to respond to questions about it.

"That's in the rearview mirror," McAdoo said late Sunday afternoon. "I'm not answering those questions. We're right here, we're right now."

McAdoo's insistence on living in the present is understandable, especially considering he made his remarks soon after the Giants held off a late charge by the Philadelphia Eagles and earned a 28-23 victory in MetLife Stadium. The Giants' third consecutive victory lifted their record to 5-3, their best midseason record since they were 6-2 in 2012.

But this game had some uh-oh moments down the stretch, the kind that were so prevalent and unpleasant last year, when the Giants lost six games in which they held a lead or were tied in the fourth quarter.

Needing one first down to ice the game, Eli Manning's third-down pass for Will Tye was tipped at the line by Connor Barwin and intercepted by linebacker Jordan Hicks, who returned the ball to the Giants' 34-yard line with 1:48 remaining. When rookie quarterback Carson Wentz quickly connected with Nelson Agholor for a 17-yard gain, the level of nervousness rose throughout MetLife.

But if anyone was still skeptical that this year will be different, the next four plays provided proof. Wentz, under fierce pressure from the Giants' front, threw four consecutive incomplete passes, the last a fourth-down throw in the end zone to Jordan Matthews, who was covered by Trevin Wade. The Giants found a way to win a game they absolutely had to have, a year after they discovered defeat for too often in close games.

"Last year is in the rearview mirror," McAdoo said. "You go back, you learn from the past and you work on today. We believe that we are going to win these football games. We believe that we're a physical team. We've just got to hang onto leads and win the games. We know we're going to get better as the game goes on and we're going to win in the end."

The victory ended the Giants' four-game losing streak to Philadelphia.

GIANTS VS. BENGALS NOVEMBER 14, 2016 GIANTS 21, BENGALS 20

Ben McAdoo believes he must coach as aggressively as he asks his players to perform. On Monday night, his unwillingness to play it safe helped produce a Giants' victory.

Trailing by six points and faced with a fourth-and-goal from the Cincinnati 3-yard line early in the fourth quarter, McAdoo had no interest in kicking a short field goal that could have halved the Giants' deficit. He was determined to take the lead.

"We were going to go for it," McAdoo said.

The gamble – though McAdoo likely would not consider it as such – paid off when Eli Manning found rookie Sterling Shepard alone near the goal line. The touchdown pass vaulted the Giants into a 21-20 lead that held up through the end of the game, thanks to strong finishes by both the offense and defense.

"We knew it was going to take touchdowns to beat this team," McAdoo said. "It's a good football team, and we felt like we needed to score touchdowns."

They got three of them, all on Manning passes, including 10-yard scoring tosses to rookie tight end Jerrell Adams and Odell Beckham, Jr. The Giants have won four consecutive games for the first time since midway through the 2013 season. That streak followed an 0-6 start. This one has improved their record to 6-3, and put them in the thick of the NFC postseason race.

McAdoo's bold decision figuratively pushed them over the goal line. And he made his mind up early not to play it safe.

Rashad Jennings – who accounted for 87 of the Giants' season-high 122 rushing yards – was stopped for no gain on the final play of the third quarter, leaving the Giants with second-and-goal from the nine. As the players walked to the other end of the field, McAdoo made his decision.

"Coach McAdoo told me on second down, 'Hey, we're in four-down territory, just so you know,'" Manning said. "... I don't know about (ever hearing that on) second down. I've heard it on third down before. We had the quarter change, so I think he had some time to think and he just wanted me to know, wanted me to tell the offensive guys, receivers, everybody, to know the circumstances that they were in four-down territory."

GIANTS AT BEARS NOVEMBER 20, 2016 GIANTS 22, BEARS 16

How appropriate that the Giants ended three successive and successful weeks at home by winning in the kind of difficult conditions that have characterized football in the Jersey Meadowlands since they first played here 40 years ago.

On a cold and blustery day that turned placekicks, punts, passes, and even snaps into an adventure, the Giants – pardon the pun – stormed back from a 7-point halftime deficit to defeat the Chicago Bears, 22-16, Sunday afternoon in MetLife Stadium.

The Giants won their fifth consecutive game – a first since 2010 – and improved their record to 7-3, their best 10-game start in eight years. They won home games in three consecutive weeks for the first time since Oct 21-Nov 4, 1962.

After falling behind, 16-9, the Giants shut out Chicago in the final two quarters.

“I’m proud of the way the guys responded at halftime,” coach Ben McAdoo said. (It was) 13-0 in the second half. Came out with the fire burning.”

Eli Manning completed 21 of 36 passes for 227 yards and did not throw an interception while passing for two scores. But he found it hard to throw, and Manning has plenty of experience throwing in North Jersey.

“It can be tough,” Manning said of the wind. “The first half, I thought it wasn’t too bad. We kind of got gusts at times there in the second half. Especially in the fourth quarter, it got pretty constant with the wind. It was just one of those days that it was going to be tough to get the ball down the field. Your throws, you wanted to have a little zip on it, and it’s tough to throw deep stuff and long out-breaking routes. I thought we did a good job keeping things over the middle more, trying clean shots. You know when you start throwing over people and put a touch on it, that’s when the wind can really affect it, so we didn’t have too many of those throws.”

Punter Brad Wing had a 42.5-yard net average on six punts and placed two balls inside the 20-yard line, but those aren’t the feats McAdoo cited after the game.

“It was very tough to handle the ball,” McAdoo said. “Even the last punt that we got off, you saw how it was a tough catch. Catching the snaps today was even a challenge for those guys in the punt game. But the kicking game was a challenge today, the pass was a challenge, and it was nice not to turn the ball over today even in a game like this where the elements factor.”

GIANTS AT BROWNS NOVEMBER 27, 2016 GIANTS 27, BEARS 13

CLEVELAND — Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie was born in 1986, 21 years after the popular television show “Rawhide” went off the air. But there he was, singing the theme song late Sunday afternoon in Cleveland.

“We are rollin’, rollin’, rollin’,” DRC crooned as he entered the locker room in FirstEnergy Stadium. It likely won’t catch on as the Giants’ theme song, but the nine-year veteran cornerback spoke — actually, sang — the truth. The Giants stretched their longest winning streak in eight years to six games with a 27-13 victory against the winless Browns. The 8-3 Giants must now prepare for a five-game stretch run that begins with three consecutive first-place teams in Pittsburgh, Dallas and Detroit.

“We have to get better,” coach Ben McAdoo said. “We believe that we’re going to win the game and find a way to get the game in our favor at the end. We need to get better at getting better as the season goes on.”

The Giants had several noteworthy performances. Eli Manning threw three touchdown passes, including two to Odell Beckham, Jr., who had a third score on a punt return nullified by a holding penalty. Dwayne Harris had the other touchdown catch, on his first reception of the season. Jason Pierre-Paul had a career-high 3.0 sacks and returned a fumble 43 yards for a score to become the first player in history to put that daily double together in a game. Punter Brad Wing was a weapon, finishing with a 44.7-yard net average and placing five punts inside the 20, including three inside the 10.

Yet the prevailing opinion in the locker room was that while the players like the feeling of rollin’, they are making the journey much more difficult than it needs to be.

The Giants finished with 296 yards and 13 first downs, and owned the ball for just 26:09, a trio of figures that hardly guarantees success in the NFL. Manning completed only 15 passes and missed several open receivers. At one point, he flung a cup to the ground in disgust on the sideline, a rare display of emotion from the 13-year veteran. The Giants were penalized nine times, and Bobby Rainey muffed a fumble that led to both a Cody Parkey field goal and Rainey’s removal as the team’s punt returner. Jeez, Robbie Gould even missed another extra point attempt, his third in two games.

“It was tough,” Manning conceded. “Tough to move the ball consistently. They had a good plan for us. They showed a lot of the same looks. It was just tough to make some plays. Had some opportunities and looks to make some. We had to come up with them. It was one of those days where they were kind of giving us some shots down the field and you have to hit them. We hit a couple of them, but we have to be able to hit more of those. Just be able to find completions and run the ball consistently. Have to move the ball better than we did today.”

GIANTS NOTEBOOK & CLIPS

Giants Notebook

By Michael Eisen
New York Giants
November 28, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The calendar flips to December on Thursday and with its arrival, the intensity and importance of every NFL game is amplified, especially for the Giants.

Why the Giants in particular? They have put together their longest winning streak in eight years at six games to improve to 8-3, the second-best record in the NFC. But they remain two games behind the Dallas Cowboys in the NFC East race.

Except for 1-10 San Francisco and 2-9 Chicago — who will, uh, clash Sunday in Chicago — every NFC team harbors dreams of making the playoffs.

The Giants are unique because of the sharp improvement in the records of the opponents they will face as opposed to those they've recently vanquished.

Only one team the Giants defeated in their winning streak currently has a winning record, 6-5 Baltimore (Philadelphia, which is 5-5 entering its game tonight against Green Bay, could make it two). Their last three opponents — the Bengals, Bears and Browns, who fell to the Giants yesterday in Cleveland, 27-13 — are a combined 5-28-1).

But four of the five teams remaining on the schedule are above .500, and the Eagles will make it unanimous if they win. The Giants arguably have the most challenging five-game finish in the league. It begins with three games against teams currently holding or sharing division leads (at Pittsburgh, and home vs. Dallas and Detroit, a threesome with a combined record of 23-10). After clearing that gauntlet, the Giants will play division road games in Philadelphia (on a Thursday night) and at 6-4-1 Washington.

"(We) pretty much have to look at December as playoff games," defensive end Olivier Vernon said after the victory in Cleveland. "December is going to determine our destiny. We just have to do what we can and play Giants football."

Which is what coach Ben McAdoo emphasized on his weekly conference call today.

"We're going to have a week-to-week mentality," McAdoo said. "I think it's important to address the elephant in the room, so to speak. Everything gets cranked up a notch in December with everyone jockeying for position. We just need to make sure we play our best football moving forward.

"All of our hard work up until this point has set the table for us to be playing meaningful football in December, which is what everyone in the league shoots for."

The follow-up question to McAdoo was whether he considers the running game to be more important in the coming month.

"December football, everything is important," McAdoo said. "That's where our identity needs to take place." McAdoo believes the Giants are "absolutely" heading in the right direction as they prepare for their crucial stretch run.

"Fundamentals, we're getting better," he said. "We've been playing smarter football. Been playing tough and hanging in there mentally and physically. Playing tough. Committed to discipline and poise, absolutely."

They'll need all that and more in the coming month.

*The Giants had 22 players in uniform yesterday with no more than three years of experience. That's virtually half the active roster, and they have others — such as cornerback Janoris Jenkins — who have never been in a playoff chase. How will McAdoo deal with that inexperience?

"We're going to rely on our veterans to lead," he said. "It's important this time of year that the players spend time together. Spend more time together talking about their football and getting our football right. We need to be mentally dialed-in on our preparation. It starts way before game day."

*Rookie wide receiver Sterling Shepard, who is second on the team with 44 receptions, was not targeted once in Cleveland. It was the first game this season in which he did not catch a pass.

"It was a combination of a lot of different things," McAdoo said. "It's unfortunate that that's the way the game went. Actually, (he) had a nice (22-yard) carry there in the fourth quarter to get us in scoring range. We have some things from an offensive perspective that when you see the type of coverages we did yesterday, you would like to get the ball in his hands."

*Odell Beckham, Jr. returned three punts for 35 yards yesterday. Those interested in whether he will continue in that role will have to watch the game in Pittsburgh on Sunday.

"We will get to that when we talk through our game plan meetings," McAdoo said. "That's not something I'm going to be talking about with all of you."

*McAdoo was asked whether running back Shane Vereen, on injured reserve with a torn pectoral muscle since Week 3, will practice this week.

"We will wait and see," McAdoo said. "We will take a look at that."

*Safety Nat Berhe and linebacker Mark Herzlich are in the NFL concussion protocol.

*McAdoo said it's too early to tell if any of the injured offensive linemen – Justin Pugh (knee), Marshall Newhouse (knee), and/or Brett Jones (calf) – will be able to play vs. the Steelers.

Ben McAdoo Feature in Giants Yearbook

By Michael Eisen
New York Giants

Ben McAdoo was 10 years old when he decided it was time to begin his gridiron career. But he faced the same problem thousands of boys with his dream have had: his weight exceeded the maximum allowable for the midget league in which he hoped to play. So McAdoo set out to drop a few pounds through a time-honored method of youth footballers, dressing in plastic garbage bags and running down Route 119 with such intensity he seemed engulfed in a personal downpour.

"I had to drop a bunch of weight to make the weight limit," McAdoo said. "I started running with one of the garbage bag suits on. I did it every day, sometimes twice a day, and then hit the steam room, something we tell the players to never do. I hit the steam room the morning of the weigh in, ran and then I was six pounds under the limit, so I made it by a pretty good clip."

McAdoo could never have known it at the time, but his youthful determination in many ways established the foundation for so much that would happen in his life, personally, professionally, and symbolically. It was an unassuming first step in a 28-year football journey that culminated this season when he assumed one of the most prestigious of all football jobs, head coach of the Giants, the NFL's flagship franchise.

But back then, it simply made him eligible for a spot on the youth team coached by Dave Hallow, a coal miner who lived across the street in Homer City, Pa. Today, Hallow is McAdoo's father-in-law. The drive from McAdoo's boyhood home to East Rutherford takes about 5½ hours. He completed it in about 18 years, stopping along the way in places like East Lansing, Pittsburgh, New Orleans, San Francisco and Green Bay, with Hallow's daughter Toni, now McAdoo's wife, joining him at every outpost. And at almost every stop, he had an experienced coach or administrator eager to help him. More often than not, those advisors hailed from western Pennsylvania.

McAdoo's weight-loss runs took him past Homer-Center High School, where his strange training outfit caught the attention of Rick Foust, who happened to be the school's head football coach. Foust soon asked McAdoo about his getup, beginning a partnership that continues today. They won a district championship together, and Foust was the first of many McAdoo mentors who provided support and assistance as the coach climbed up the coaching ladder.

The steely resolve and unrelenting work ethic McAdoo displayed then, and which has propelled his career, were characteristic not only of the house in which he was raised — his dad, after all, was a coal miner — but in the region in which it sat. Perhaps no area of the country embodies the so-called blue collar mentality as does western Pennsylvania, as evidenced by the steel mills and coal mines that provided a living for so many rugged men. There, people aren't admired for their fancy titles or net worth, but for how they live their lives, and whether they adhere to the region's core tenets - valuing faith, family, and hard work without complaint, accepting responsibility, and fostering a kinship that blankets the region so pervasively, strangers instantly bond upon learning they both hail from that unique slice of Americana.

"I kind of get chills listening to that," said Paul Schager, who grew up in the small town of Emporium, received a master's degree from Indiana University of Pennsylvania (McAdoo's alma mater), and later worked with McAdoo when the coach was a graduate student at Michigan State, where Schager is now an executive associate athletic director. "People from Western PA kind of stick together and look out for each other. That was one of the things that I think helped Ben along the way. There is a sense of pride. I think it's the work ethic, it's the humility that the people have there. I've been out of Pennsylvania since I left IUP, I've been in Michigan ever since. It's something that's not left me. I think those are the two things: it's the hard work and the humility that go hand in hand. I'm not sure what it is, but you feel it. It's hard to put a finger on what it is, but there's a common thread. Every time I run into people throughout my career that I know have that background, we've always seemed to get along. I'm not sure what it is, other than the fact it's just regular people. He's from Homer City of all places, I'm from a small town. You don't really know how much you appreciated your home until you left it. I didn't realize it was a special place until I've been far and long since removed from it."

"It's all you know," said Green Bay Packers coach Mike McCarthy, a Pittsburgh native and longtime McAdoo confidant. "You don't really realize until you leave there that it's not like that everywhere. It definitely resonates with the people from western PA, and we take a lot of pride in it. I think it's always fun to go to NFL functions, because there always are so many people from western PA. And Ben's going to carry on the tradition."

McAdoo is the perfect embodiment of a western Pennsylvania success story. Though he no longer dons black plastic outerwear, no one works harder. He has a relentless commitment to family, both immediate and beyond. And he couldn't be more loyal to friends and former co-workers had he spent time in a war zone with them.

So what is it, exactly, that makes McAdoo's home region so special?

"It is the people," he said. "If you aren't gritty, they are going to beat it into you. That is important. That work ethic, the pride that you have in the work ethic, being about the teamwork, character, family, that is an important part of it. It is a little bit of a cult, and we like to take care of our own."

McAdoo learned that early in life, not only from his parents, but from other Homer City families, including the Hallows.

"My dad still does have a very, very strong work ethic," said Toni McAdoo, who has known Ben most of her life and married him in 2006. "When I was growing up he worked long hours, and still does. Maybe that's why I'm so used to it; it was my mom and my sister and I a lot, because he was always working. So there are very strong family values. My parents have been married for over 40 years; same with Ben's parents. They've been together since high school, as well as mine. We both come from very strong families with very strong work ethics. My dad worked in the coal mines. I was about 15 when they closed. There was no down time with him; he got right back out there and found something else (as an inspector at an overhead crane company. 'It drove us crazy, because for years he was underground, and then he was in these steel mills on these cranes. He went from one extreme to the other'). He knew he had a family to support. I saw that early on, and I always had a job from the minute I could start working at 16."

If hard work comprises half the foundation of western Pennsylvania, football accounts for the other half. The region is fiercely devoted to the game. It often seems everyone is wearing — and most houses are adorned with — the black and gold of the beloved Pittsburgh Steelers.

The region has produced a storied roster of coaches, including McCarthy, Marvin Lewis, Bill Cowher, Jim Haslett, Marty Schottenheimer, Chuck Knox, Ted Marchibroda, Joe Walton, and Mike Ditka. And that's just a short list. Most were raised in working families so typical of the region, and knew from a young age the value of hard work.

They were also high school players in an area that comes to a virtual standstill on Friday nights except for the high school football games. Ben McAdoo played in those games for Homer City.

"It's an unbelievable sense of community," said Scott Mossgrove, who gave McAdoo — then still a college student at Indiana University of Pennsylvania (IUP) — his first coaching job when he was the freshman and junior varsity coach at Indiana Area High School. "The coaching community is tight knit. The families and the towns live and die with their teams. It is not something that you see all across the country. It's a very blue collar work ethic. The people, they come home from work on Friday nights at 5 o'clock and they go to the football games. The stands are almost always full, even in the smallest towns in western Pennsylvania, for games on Friday nights. The coal mines were huge here in town, and that work ethic was instilled in the kids in western PA. I grew up in Canton (Ohio), which was steel country. That was just part of who we are and what we do. Ben is an absolute role model for that — he has a great work ethic, very family oriented, dedicated to his craft. I can't think of a better place to come from than western Pennsylvania."

Neither, of course, can McAdoo. Homer City is located 40 miles northeast of Pittsburgh and is home to approximately 1,700 people.

"It is a mecca compared to some of the other towns around it," said McAdoo, 39. "It is a blue-collar coal-mining town. My father was a coal miner. Grandfather was a coal miner. Growing up there was a little bit different than a lot of people (in the New York/New Jersey area) would be familiar with. What was important to us was work ethic, grit, sticking together. That was something we liked to hang our hat on."

The way of life has changed for many in the area, but the bedrock principles have not.

"The coal mines are not thriving today, which is unfortunate," McAdoo said. "There is a power generating station and then as you went toward the city, the steel mills are not there anymore. They are no longer in operation."

Ben is the oldest of Tim and Tina McAdoo's three children. He is 18 months older than his sister (Jodi), who is four years older than their brother (Tim). It was a close-knit group in a loving home that faced challenges similar to so many other area families.

"My dad is a really hard worker," said Ben's sister, Jodi Orr. "My mom pushed us and taught us to go after what we want. She would say, 'I want you to live a better life than me. I want you to work hard. Think about what you want to do with the rest of your life.'

"We knew the value of a dollar. That's just how we were raised. We knew we had to work for what we wanted. Nothing got handed to us."

McAdoo was a loving son and brother who had the protective instinct shared by the oldest child in so many families. He could be simultaneously kind and tough.

"Ben was very straightforward, he just told it like it was all the time," said Orr, who is now an elementary school reading specialist 10 minutes from Homer City. "He's always been like that. The way that he portrays himself with the media, with everyone, that's just how he is. He's very, 'This is what I think and I'm going to tell you.' If I had a goal, he would say to me, 'Are you going to do it, or are you going to just talk about it?' He was very protective of me, but he wouldn't lead on that he was protective of me, if that makes sense. The typical brother stuff. He would defend me if somebody said something about me, especially in high school. He always looked out for me."

McAdoo was enamored with sports. And like so many western Pennsylvania boys, his heart quickly drifted toward football. The commitment was solidified when he watched John Elway work his magic in the 1986 AFC Championship Game in Cleveland.

"I played all sports, but the first time the game of football really grabbed me was 'The Drive' when Denver came back (to win in overtime after the famed Elway-led march)," McAdoo said. "That was the first game I actually sat down and watched with my father and his brothers. He has 11 brothers and sisters. I watched 'The Drive' with him and his brothers and that kind of grabbed me a little bit and drew me to offense and the quarterback position in particular."

McAdoo turned 9½ two days before that game was played. When the next football season was approaching, he wanted to be part of the action. But first he had to lose some weight, which led to him donning the black garbage bag uniform.

"He would cut holes in the bags and put his arms and his head through them," Orr said.

The McAdoo family lived across the street from Homer-Center High School. When McAdoo was running through the neighborhood in his basic black, sweat-inducing outfit, Foust couldn't help but notice.

"That's the first memory I have of Ben," said Foust, who was at Homer-Center for 18 of his 43 years and counting coaching football. "I was working and you look out and you see this kid and you're thinking, 'Okay, here goes this kid going down the road with his garbage bag again.' The second or third time I saw him running down the road with the garbage bag on, I thought, 'I better find out what's wrong with this kid.' I walked past and said, 'Excuse me, but I've seen you three or four times with this garbage bag on, and I'm just wondering what's going on.' He said, 'I want to play midget football and I have to make the weight limit, so I have to lose some weight.' He indeed did lose the weight and did get a chance to play midget football."

The game has been a big part of his life ever since. McAdoo was immediately smitten with football: the fun, the challenges, and the camaraderie it provided. He was enamored with all aspects of the game, which helped him find the path to a coaching career.

"I loved being part of a team," he said. "I liked being coached. I enjoyed leading. I enjoyed the detailed part of things, combining the physical and mental part of the game. I liked hitting people. I enjoyed the physical part of the game, the sacrifice."

At Homer-Center High School, he played left tackle and some linebacker. "Ben was a good player," Foust said. "When he came in as a 10th grader, even then, he wanted to be right all the time. He'd always ask 100 questions and you'd answer 100 questions, then he'd ask another 100 questions."

"I needed to know," McAdoo said. "I was one of those guys who asked, 'Why?' a lot. I wanted to know why and how everything fit together as much as possible. That was important to me. I felt that it gave me an advantage and I could digest it all."

Foust estimates that McAdoo's Wildcats ran 95 percent of the time. "We had a nice football team," Foust said.

But "nice" was not the adjective used to describe McAdoo's demeanor on the field. His capacity for bluntness was as much a part of his game as run-blocking.

"It would be third-and-one or fourth-and-one and we were going to run the ball with our fullback up over Ben," said Foust, who is currently an assistant coach for his son, Eric, at Shippensburg (Pa.) High School. "There would often be times that Ben would come out of the huddle, get in his stance, and say to the defensive lineman opposite of him, 'We're going to run right over your face this time.' He would tell them where we're coming, when we're coming. Ben didn't care. And we did."

"I had some demons as a young man," McAdoo said. "I probably still do. I did my share of trash talking, and I enjoyed that part of the game. I don't think that it was always appreciated from the staff, but I think that it brought a little edge to the team, and I brought a confidence to the team and we won some ball games."

"But Mr. Foust - I still can't call him by his first name - he never would accept anything but my best, and would not play me unless I gave him my best. And that was frustrating to me as a young player and a young man. But I appreciate it today."

The highlight of McAdoo's high school career occurred on Nov. 5, 1994, when Homer-Center defeated Bellwood-Antis, 3-0, for a coveted district title.

"It was a big deal to us," McAdoo said. "There is a lot of pride in good football being played in that area. To be able to come out on top and hoist the trophy - a lot of work went into it. It was exciting to be with your teammates. It is hard to replace that. You can't find that feeling everywhere. Vince Lombardi said, 'Winning isn't everything, it is the only thing.' I don't think many people understand what he meant by that. What he meant by that was it is the only thing that creates that feeling. There aren't really words that can describe it. You can only feel it. We felt it that night."

But ever the perfectionist, McAdoo is not completely happy when he thinks of that game. Foust recalls that Homer-Center traveled inside their opponents' 50-yard line five times without scoring. "I think it was probably the sixth trip in there that we decided to kick a field goal," he said, "which was the only field goal we kicked all year."

"I remember the game vividly," McAdoo said. "We had a chance to get our fullback out a couple times. One time I was leading the way, and if I would've peeled back and blocked behind him, I think I could've sprung him for a touchdown - Steve Romansic, we called him 'Bobo.' He was a good friend of mine, and I can still see that play. I tried to lead the way in front of him, and I impeded his progress a little bit instead of coming back and blocking behind him. We'll take the trophy, but not scoring a touchdown in that game bothers me."

Yes, the game that was played 22 years ago.

Ideally, McAdoo would have continued playing football, but "there wasn't a great market in the college game for a 180-pound left tackle." He became the first member of his family to attend college when he enrolled at IUP, which was just a six or seven-minute drive from his home.

The archetype story is that miners encourage their children to pursue a better life. Tim McAdoo never said that directly to his oldest child. "He wanted me to chase my passion," McAdoo said. "He worked hard, but he was a man who stood on things without a bunch of words being said."

McAdoo graduated from IUP summa cum laude with a degree in health and physical education. But he admits he wasn't always a good student, and not playing football helped him succeed academically in college.

"I was a late bloomer," he said. "It seemed like one day I woke up and realized what was important. The game and Rick Foust had a lot to do with that. He wouldn't expect anything less than your best. That kind of rubbed off on other things. When I was done playing, I had a hard time finding things to replace the competition. I used academics to do that."

But he still missed football. After a year away from the game, McAdoo wanted back in. "I decided I needed to coach or do something with the team one way or another," he said. He volunteered at his Homer-Center before Foust retired from the school. McAdoo then hooked on at a larger high school, Indiana Area, working for Mossgrove, whom he did not previously know.

"He was still attending classes and I hired him as a coach, a paid position as a college student," Mossgrove said. "Ben was our offensive and defensive line coach and special teams coordinator for our freshman program. He was very ambitious, very detail-oriented; it was very easy to see that he was meticulous in his work ethic. He related very well to our players. Our players loved him. Very knowledgeable about the game and also he's a player's coach. You could tell that players were drawn to him and they wanted to do very well for him in their performance on the field.”

Mossgrove and McAdoo shared football duties apart from practices and games.

“Ben and I were the scouts,” Mossgrove said. “We would go on Friday nights to scout our upcoming opponents. That was back in the days before internet and a lot of video stuff.”

McAdoo credits Mossgrove with reinforcing his desire to coach football.

“His organizational skills were just phenomenal in the way that he detailed and organized practice, and I’ll never forget that,” McAdoo said. “It was like a college program. I was drawn to that right away, the detail and organization, and the way he ran things. It was awesome. Awesome.”

McAdoo enjoyed working with the young players and being around the game, but still wasn’t fully committed to a coaching career. So for the first time, he left the western Pennsylvania cocoon and in 2000 headed to Michigan State University, where he earned a master’s degree in kinesiology in nine months while adhering to a schedule that left little time for extracurricular activities like eating and sleeping.

“I was working in the athletic department and teaching classes,” McAdoo said. “I was 21-22 (years old), and I had a pretty good gig. I was a teacher’s assistant and I was working in the athletic department in marketing and ticket sales and promotions for a year. Going to school full-time, then working full-time and teaching classes, it was a full load. I didn’t have a lot of free time. Nights were mostly working at the basketball games or hockey games and doing baseball on the weekends, or whatever you needed to do to get your job done for the athletic department. But I learned a lot. It was baptism by fire.”

McAdoo planned to attend law school in Michigan and then work in either collegiate or professional sports. “I realized all along I wanted to work in sports,” he said. “I didn’t know that I wanted to coach until I took that year off. At the end of the day, that’s what I wanted to do. I just got there a little different way than most.”

He tried to get a high school coaching job in the state, but his Pennsylvania certification didn’t carry over. So he began “poking around,” but couldn’t get a nibble from anyone. He went to see Schager, who was then McAdoo’s boss in the athletic department as the marketing and promotions director. Schager had first heard of McAdoo from Dr. Jim Mill, who had been their professor (at different times) at IUP. Mill, a former assistant football coach at the school, chaired the school’s Health and Physical Education department when he met McAdoo, then a first-semester freshman, in the fall of 1995. They bonded over a mutual love of the game. Mill asked McAdoo, “Where do you see yourself in 10 years?” McAdoo replied, “I will be a football coach.”

With Mill’s guidance, McAdoo decided to enroll at Michigan State, where another Mill student was already entrenched in the athletic department.

“He (Mill) said, ‘I’m sending a guy up to Michigan State, take care of him, watch over him,’” Schager said. “I didn’t do much other than I would’ve for anybody, but definitely if it was a western PA guy coming out here, I was going to do maybe a little bit extra for him.”

McAdoo and Schager had several long conversations about the student’s future.

“He was a guy that I went to for advice,” McAdoo said. “He told me to chase it, chase coaching.”

“He started talking about football and I said, ‘Coaching specifically?’” Schager said. “I said, ‘Why don’t you go over to the football building and tell somebody over there?’ It wasn’t any divine advice that I gave him. Just go show up and see if there’s anything you can do over there. That’s kind of what you have to do in sports. You have to just show up on the doorstep. They’re not necessarily looking for you, they’re looking to get their work done.”

Working hard has always been McAdoo’s forte. So he visited Dr. Clarence Underwood, who was then the athletic director.

“He said, ‘What did you get out of coaching for in the first place?’” McAdoo related. “I told him I didn’t know I wanted to be a coach until I got out of it. He helped me get my foot in the door there. Bobby Williams was the head coach at the time, and he was just getting started. They brought me in, and I got some work done off the field. I was an off-the-field aid there. I did a lot of computer work and a lot of film work, and whatever I could do that way to contribute.”

McAdoo soon gravitated toward Sal Sunseri, who was then the Spartans linebackers and special teams coach. It didn't take long for Sunseri to be impressed with McAdoo's football knowledge, computer skills and willingness to work long hours.

“He showed me the detail of his work, and all the different ways that he could show motions and different alignments,” Sunseri said. “I said, ‘This guy's going to be pretty good.’ I told him, ‘You're going to have to volunteer your time.’ Well, him volunteering his time was a commitment to being there all day. I was worried about him taking care of what he was going to school for. I was like, ‘Wow.’ After seeing his work, and then he started working on special teams and doing all the drawings and all the game plan stuff and adjustments, it was better than anything that we had ever had. So we started him as being a volunteer. After I left the next year, Bobby Williams hired him as his own personal G.A. so he could do the presentations and the PowerPoints and keep everybody's attention. The most important thing was his ability on the computer, but his ability to learn, his ability to grasp concepts, his ability to have a commitment to excellence.”

Sunseri took an interest in McAdoo for another reason — he was a fellow western Pennsylvania native, born and raised in Pittsburgh and a graduate of that city's university. Sunseri was even drafted by the Steelers. In McAdoo he saw a kindred spirit, a young man who grew up in a close, hard-working family, and was determined to succeed without ever having anything handed to him. When it came to doing everything necessary to provide for their family, Tim McAdoo was cut from the same mold as Sunseri's role model.

“When you grew up at that time, a lot of people were working in the steel mills, working the coal mines, working down at the river,” Sunseri said. “Those guys worked 12-hour shifts. As a young kid growing up, very seldom did you see your parent. My father had his own wholesale grocery business. He'd leave at 5 o'clock in the morning and not get home until 7 o'clock at night. It was a work ethic that you saw; the only way you were going to be successful in this world is to put the time in and put the effort in and do your due diligence to be successful. There's a work ethic and there's a toughness about growing up in western Pennsylvania, it's a blue-collar way. You go to school, do what you you're supposed to do, get a job, go to work, take care of your family.”

It was the mindset McAdoo had when, after impressing everyone at Michigan State, he set out on the kind of odyssey so many coaches have traveled. His next stop was Fairfield University in Connecticut.

“Small school, I-AA and no scholarships,” McAdoo said. “I had the chance to really wrap my hands around coaching. The kids there were outstanding. They were very bright and hard-working. We worked hard, but we enjoyed it.”

McAdoo was there for just one season before the school announced it was discontinuing the football program.

“I knew we were in trouble when the head coach came in and said, ‘I am going to take the defensive coordinator job at Duquesne,’ and Duquesne was in the same conference we were in,” McAdoo said. “When he left I really had a chance to be hands-on with the recruiting operations and with the winter conditioning and those types of things. It was another great learning experience.”

During his short stay in Fairfield, McAdoo made one of the most important connections in his career, and one of the most memorable journeys of his life — for a job he didn't get. Sunseri, then the Carolina Panthers' defensive line coach, told him about a position with McCarthy, who was the New Orleans Saints offensive coordinator. That's one western Pennsylvania native recommending a second son of the region for a job with a third coach who was raised in the area.

“It's like anything else in this world,” Sunseri said. “Sometimes people want to get opportunities, and we are going to take care of friends. You don't just do this for anybody; for what that kid did for me at Michigan State and helping me out and being an assistant to me — you're going to help good, quality people. Mike McCarthy was the offensive coordinator down at the Saints. There was a quality control job open, so I called Mike and I said, ‘Mike, let me just tell you, this guy is unbelievable, you need to give this guy at least an interview.’”

McCarthy would have been willing to do exactly that, except for one minor detail — the job was already filled. But McAdoo was typically undaunted. He cold-called McCarthy, learned there was no opening, and hopped in his car to drive west, anyway. Western Pennsylvania folks don't back down quickly or easily.

"McCarthy told me he would let me know after he got back from (the scouting combine in) Indianapolis if the job was filled or not," McAdoo said. "I did not want to wait. I wanted to try and grab him as soon as I could get my hands on him. It was 2003. Between Fairfield and Pittsburgh, it was one of the worst snowstorms we have had, and I made the trip in a Daewoo. I remember driving in West Virginia over the hills trying to figure out if I was on the road or not. Everyone was in a state of emergency, and I am trucking through. It took me about 26 hours to get from Connecticut to Indianapolis."

When McAdoo arrived he had no place to stay, so he slept on the floor of Sunseri's room.

"I had my suit ready to go, and I was sitting in the mall in Indianapolis outside the Canterbury (Hotel) with a big duffle bag full of binders ready to show my work," McAdoo said. "I ended up stalking him a little bit at the combine, but by the time I got to him, the position was filled already. You've got to do what you've got to do sometimes. I like to think I made a good impression."

Oh, he did.

"Talked to him the day before," McCarthy said. "He wanted to get together. I didn't realize he wanted to get together the next day. I was staying at the Canterbury Hotel and came walking through there kind of lunch time-ish after the workouts over at the Dome, and there he was sitting there. I had never met Ben. He must have had about 10 playbooks and drove all night. Yeah, great first impression."

With no position immediately available in New Orleans, McAdoo returned to western Pennsylvania to work as an offensive assistant at the University of Pittsburgh. "I did whatever I could to try to find work," McAdoo said.

At Pitt, he worked under highly-regarded coach Walt Harris. "I don't exactly know how it all happened, but he came as a grad assistant for us," Harris said.

Just as he had with Sunseri, McAdoo quickly impressed a coach in a position of authority who had not previously known him. Harris had once employed another devoted coach, Jon Gruden, as a grad assistant for three years. Now, after seven years at Pitt, he turned to another one to organize his library of game tape, which was as unkempt as a playground that had been invaded by a dozen 3-year-olds.

"It was a tremendous mess," Harris said. "Any assignment I gave Jon, he took as an opportunity to get better, which is what Ben did. But the job I gave Ben, I think, was more insurmountable than any job I gave Jon, organizing all this video from years and years and years. And he did it. I was shocked. It's hard to comprehend what a big job it was because it's all this video. He organized it so that I could find it and play it and watch it, which was a dream. So right then I knew he was something."

"He had a lot of information," McAdoo said, "and I built a library in the office and I kind of created my own Dewey Decimal System for him so that we could find everything that we were looking for and organized it that way."

Gruden went on to become a head coach for the Oakland Raiders and Tampa Bay Buccaneers, the team he led to victory in Super Bowl XXXVI. He is now the popular analyst on ESPN's Monday Night Football broadcasts. Harris sees many of the qualities in McAdoo that he found so impressive in Gruden.

"I always felt like both those guys had potential because they wanted it so bad," Harris said. "How did I know they wanted it so bad? I just watched how hard they worked. You didn't have to look over your shoulder and see if they were working hard. You just give them an assignment and, bam, they would not rest until they got it done."

Harris also left a strong impression on McAdoo, though they were together for only one season.

"Walt was a very particular, detailed offensive mind," McAdoo said. "Great with the quarterbacks, and he was very demanding of his coaches. And I'll never forget that about him. I felt he brought the best out in me and I learned a lot about myself that year at Pitt."

Harris is a northern California native who played and coached at the University of the Pacific. He left Pitt after the 2004 season to coach at Stanford. But he is now retired in ... Pittsburgh.

"Once you get a taste of Pittsburgh, you can't leave," McAdoo said. So while Harris wasn't raised in western Pennsylvania, he is intimately aware of the deep emotions people have for their native region.

"A lot of their roots were in all the coal and steel and the skies where soot was in the air and you'd never see the sun," Harris said. "I think it made them a lot tougher, mentally tougher. They always looked for the bright days even though there weren't very many. I remember when I was working with coach (Johnny) Majors, he gave me western Pennsylvania as a recruiting area. I went to see this one center and when I sat in their house, his older sister was way tougher than the guy I was recruiting. Their work ethic and the toughness that exists with all of the people, not just the guys, also the women, they're hard-nosed and their tough."

McAdoo left Pittsburgh to join the staff at the University of Akron. But he stayed just a short time, because McCarthy, still the Saints' coordinator under head coach Jim Haslet, a Pittsburgh native and IUP alumna, had a job that was actually open. The two coaches from western PA gave McAdoo his first NFL job, as an offensive quality control coach.

"They called, and it was a great opportunity," McAdoo said. "You had to go somewhere and leave quickly. You feel loyal, but you have to look at things from a perspective that is best for you and the family I wanted to create.

"I was Haslett's assistant. I was McCarthy's assistant, and I was the liaison from the coaching staff to the administration side of the building. I had a lot of responsibility as far as administratively with schedules, facilities and travel. ... I don't think I slept for the first six months I was there, because I was chomping at the bit to work every day."

McAdoo stayed with the Saints for only the 2004 season, and within a short time span landed jobs with two of his mentors. The first was at Stanford, where Harris had just been named head coach.

"He offered me a position (coaching tackles and tight ends) and I jumped at it," McAdoo said. "I hit the recruiting trail. Anyone at Stanford knows how interesting that is, because not everyone can get into Stanford. It is a pretty special place. When you recruit there, you have to put a lot of miles in. I was flying all around the country recruiting."

And then he was offered a job just down the street.

Former Giants defensive coordinator Mike Nolan — who, oddly enough, is not from western Pennsylvania — was the new coach of the San Francisco 49ers. He hired McCarthy as his offensive coordinator, and they offered McAdoo a position as an assistant offensive line and quality control coach. "It was another opportunity to get in on a fresh start with a new staff," McAdoo said.

That proved to be another one-year stint for McAdoo. In 2006, McCarthy got his first head coaching assignment, with the Green Bay Packers (a job he still holds). One of his first hires was McAdoo, who reached another milestone by getting his first position group, the tight ends.

"You always want to get your own room and get your hands on that room, and make an impression that way," McAdoo said. "I was by trade a teacher, so I really looked forward to the opportunity of taking that room and teaching the room and carrying it out onto the field, and putting my trade to the test. That was a great opportunity and a tradition-rich organization. Like the other places I have been, I was with good people, and had a chance to win and make an impression."

One of those he impressed immediately was Joe Philbin, who had been with the Packers since 2003 and switched from coaching the tight ends to the offensive line when McCarthy and McAdoo arrived. Philbin was Green Bay's offensive coordinator from 2007-11 before becoming the head coach of the Miami Dolphins.

"The thing with Ben was if you gave him a job to do, whatever it was - some years it might have been short yardage, some years it might have been red zone, some years it might have been third down, he kind of grew and his role expanded every single year - you knew that a) the information he was going to bring to you was accurate, because he was going to do his homework, and b) he was a creative coach," said Philbin, who is now the offensive line and assistant head coach of the Indianapolis Colts. "He had good ideas, a good thought process of his own. He just wouldn't steal from others. He would do his research, he would do his homework, he was a good communicator, and whatever information he had was very thorough, very detailed. Really just did an excellent job every time he had added responsibility. Ben would certainly meet the expectations and really do a great job."

Philbin became one of the many supporters who took McAdoo under his wing and provided valuable guidance.

"Joe is one of the finest men and coaches I have been around," McAdoo said. "He has been coaching a long time and has coached a variety of positions. He worked his way up from a small school (Washington & Jefferson College) and I liked that about him. He is a great teacher. I just gravitated to him. We saw a similar game. He is a good leader, a heck of a coach, learned a lot of football from him, and it was very important to my development."

So was coaching tight ends, probably more than any other group McCarthy could have given him.

"I think it is a very important position to coach," McAdoo said. "It prepares you to coach any position on the offensive side of the ball, because you are involved in the pass protection, the inline and the backfield, you are involved in route running, inline from the number one, number two, number three spot and in the run game you have to teach all of the run blocks. It prepares you. You can go O-line, you can go quarterback, you can go receivers, you can coach just about any position on the offense after you coach the tight end position."

During his six seasons as the Packers' tight ends coach (2006-11), McAdoo tutored such outstanding players as Donald Lee and Jermichael Finley.

The highlight of those years was Green Bay's victory over Pittsburgh in Super Bowl XLV following the 2010 season. The sixth-seeded Packers won three road postseason games to advance to the title game. They actually had a better record in 2009, but lost a 51-45 overtime shootout in Arizona in an NFC Wild Card Game.

"In 2010, we had some pieces in place to make a run at it," McAdoo said. "Then everyone started getting hurt, and it was a challenge. You would go in for your Wednesday morning meeting, and you would see new outside linebackers. We were running a lot of guys through there, trying to find the right pieces because we had a ton of injuries. When you had so many injuries and moving pieces, it was special to see how everyone gelled together and worked as one to find a way to get it done. It didn't have to be pretty. There aren't any style points. Some way, somehow, we found a way."

Asked for a specific Super Bowl memory, McAdoo does not mention Aaron Rodgers' three touchdown passes, or wide receiver Jordy Nelson's nine catches.

"I would probably say holding my daughter, she was two, as the confetti was coming down and she was saying, 'Daddy, what is that?' McAdoo said. "And I told her that was confetti. She just looked at me and said, 'What a mess!' I will never forget that. That was pretty special."

In 2012, McCarthy named McAdoo the quarterbacks coach, putting the rising assistant in charge of the Packers' most valuable player and one of the NFL's very best and most popular performers, Rodgers.

"It lit a fire in my gut," McAdoo said. "I was excited for the opportunity to work with Aaron and the quarterbacks. I felt that was a necessary step in my development, to be able to go in and effectively work in that environment and work in that room. So much of what we do is through the eyes of the quarterback. I have been in that room a lot, just because of the positions and jobs I have had, but to be able to sit in the front was a necessary part of the development."

"The way Aaron approaches the game — he gets a lot of credit for his arm, and for being smart, and his feet and being able to extend plays, but the way he prepares and the way he thinks about the game is unique. I was excited to be able to contribute to that and be a part of that, and find ways I could help him get better. That was very exciting."

So was the 2013 season, but for a far different reason. Rodgers missed seven games with a fractured collarbone, and McAdoo was forced to prepare three other players to start at quarterback (Seneca Wallace, Scott Tolzien and Matt Flynn). Even with the frequently changing cast of quarterbacks, Green Bay won the NFC North championship with an 8-7-1 record.

"(Wallace and Tolzien) were just learning the offense," McAdoo said. "That was definitely a challenge, but you couldn't have had two better guys for it. They worked at it. We got in there early and stayed late. A lot of times we would be out before pregame, drilling the footwork and repping the ververbiage before games. Aaron got hurt on a Monday Night in Chicago on the first series. Seneca had only been in Green Bay for seven weeks or so, and he comes in and plays that week, and then that next week in the first series, he goes out with another injury. So then Scott Tolzien comes in, and now at least Seneca had reps for six or seven weeks there. Tolzien only had six reps, period, in our offense. He went in and I think he threw for 273 yards, a touchdown, had a turnover, but came in and played admirably. He played well. He gave us a chance to win the game. You couldn't have a better group of guys who understood what you needed them to do to do their part. And then we ended up signing Matt Flynn back. He runs the system as well as anybody. He does a hell of a job running the system and the offense. We had a couple of nice wins there."

The Packers' offense finished the season ranked third in the NFL (400.3 yards a game) and, despite missing Rodgers for almost half the season, sixth in passing yards (266.8). When he did play, Rodgers was outstanding, completing 66.6 percent of his passes, throwing for 17 touchdowns against only eight interceptions and finishing with a passer rating of 104.9.

"Ben was excellent," McCarthy said. "He mastered every job he ever had - quality control, assistant offensive line coach, tight ends, quarterbacks. He was always super prepared, diligent, an excellent, excellent teacher, adjusted his teaching style to whatever players he's teaching - you obviously coach Jermichael Finley different than you coach Aaron Rodgers. His adaptation to players and fellow staff members and for us to be together at three different stints, I think, really, was a good experience for him, because you get to see how an offense ran in New Orleans, then we put the offense in San Francisco, then put it in again in Green Bay. I owe him a lot. He's a part of my success and I'm rooting for him."

McAdoo believes he can't overstate what McCarthy has contributed to his career.

"Big influence in my life," McAdoo said. "Ten years with him, in three different spots. He is a great mentor."

McAdoo's outstanding work in Green Bay caught the attention of the Giants, who hired him as their offensive coordinator following the 2013 season. After climbing the coaching ladder for more than 15 years, McAdoo said, "I felt that I was well-groomed for the position."

The evidence proves he was correct. McAdoo installed an offense and coordinated an attack that was one of the NFL's best during his two seasons as coordinator. When he joined the franchise, McAdoo took command of an offense that had finished 28th in the NFL the previous season. In 2013, the Giants averaged 307.5 yards per game, including 83.3 rushing and 224.3 passing. They scored 294 points. In the last two years, when McAdoo formulated game plans and called the plays, the Giants' offense ranked 10th and eighth, respectively, in the NFL. They averaged 367.2 and 372.3 total yards, 100.2 and 100.6 rushing yards, and 267.0 and 271.7 passing yards. The Giants' point totals were 380 in 2014, and 420 in the 2015 season.

Just as Rodgers had before him, Eli Manning excelled under McAdoo's tutelage. In 2015, Manning completed 387 of 618 passes (62.6 percent) for 4,432 yards, 35 touchdowns and 14 interceptions. Both the attempts and completions were franchise records, and the 35 touchdown passes were a career-high.

After Tom Coughlin stepped down as head coach after last season, the Giants interviewed six candidates to replace him. But McAdoo's success with the offense, familiarity with the players, and vision for the future made him the clear choice to team president John Mara, executive vice president Steve Tisch and general manager Jerry Reese. On Jan. 14, the Giants announced that McAdoo had been selected as the 17th head coach in franchise history.

When Ben got his prestigious new job, his reaction reminded Toni of her father's when the coal mines closed.

"'Ready to get to work' is pretty much what I think he said," she recalled. "'Let's get working here.' There's no down time with Ben."

The following day, McAdoo was formally introduced at a news conference at the Quest Diagnostics Training Center. After thanking the team's ownership and Reese for the opportunity, he said, "there are some excited people back in southwestern Pennsylvania." He thanked both his immediate and extended families, and the Packers and Giants. McAdoo then said, "I've been very fortunate in my career that there's been a lot of coaches, a lot of players, a lot of administrators that have taken interest in me and my career. I wouldn't be here without them and I am going to read you a list of names, so bear with me."

He listed 23 individuals by name that had helped him reach this pinnacle his career, beginning with Foust and including Rob Nymick (an assistant coach at Homer-Center), Mill, Mossgrove, Schager, Sunseri, Harris, Haslett, McCarthy, Philbin, Rodgers, Brett Favre, Donald Driver, Lee, Finley, Manning and Coughlin. McAdoo tries to keep in touch with as many men on that list as he can on at least a semi-regular basis.

"It was important for me to see that this man, who I have known for a lot of years, still maintains that piece of him," Foust said. "No matter how the New York Giants are, in his world, his family is the priority."

"It was an incredible feeling and I was extremely humbled," Mossgrove said. "I didn't even know what to say. My son called me from college to let me know that Ben had mentioned me. I certainly did not expect that. If I could help him along the way in just one small segment of his career, then I'm happy about that, because as a teacher and as a coach, you want to help others to reach their goals and their dreams. He certainly has as the Giants head coach."

Schager said, "It's been pretty cool to see him work his way up through the ranks. I loved his answer when I watched his interviews after he took the job and somebody asked him whether he felt this came quickly to him. I don't know what his exact quote was, but his answer was, 'It didn't come soon enough.' I said, 'Man, he's ready to go.' He's in a big-time position, but I can still kind of see that kid from Homer City. It's cool. It's pretty unique that a small town guy can have such a role in the biggest spotlight there is."

All those people who supported McAdoo on his journey to become an NFL head coach are rooting for him, and are certain he will succeed.

"He's ready," McCarthy said. "He's never not been ready for the next opportunity. He's a grinder. His mind is always working. He'll do a great job."

"He's a team-first kind of guy, he understands the game of football, I think he understands people," Philbin said. "To me, he'll set a great example for guys on the staff in terms of professionalism and detail and love of the game, and respect of the game. I think the players will follow along. I think he'll do great."

There's also a much larger group of people rooting for McAdoo — seemingly half of western Pennsylvania. The citizens there will always support their beloved Steelers, but McAdoo's presence has made them Giants fans. Nowhere is that feeling stronger than in the McAdoo household in Homer City.

"My dad is pretty quiet about things, but I know he's very proud," Jodi Orr said. "He's pretty quiet, but he just thinks all this is so cool. My mom, she's an emotional person, so she cries. It's just amazing. She's just so excited. We all are. We got new bracelets, New York Giants bracelets. We have flags that we hang out in our yards. We really get into it."

They're not alone.

Giants' new cornerback traveled long, hard road to get here

By Paul Schwartz
New York Post
May 18, 2016

Did you catch bin Laden?"

That was one of the questions the inquisitive Janoris Jenkins, then a sophomore at Pahokee (Fla.) High School, asked Sandy Cornelio, a US Army recruiter patrolling the hallways for prospects.

Jenkins showed interest in the war, in what was going on overseas, and Cornelio pressed the youngster to join the Army.

"I'm like 'I'm a football player, what do you mean the Army?' " Jenkins told The Post. "He said, 'We could use you.' I'm like, 'I don't think you can use ME.' "

No, Jenkins would not head into a military life, but failed recruitment did spawn a unique relationship, with Jenkins calling Cornelio, 34, his "big brother" and his "mentor," an unusual pairing that just might have saved Jenkins from ruination and certainly helped steer him to his new starring role as a high-priced Giants cornerback.

"At some point, you need somebody in your life for guidance," Jenkins said.

"I had traveled all over the world, I've seen different things, so I could explain to him things in a different perspective that he's never seen before," Cornelio said from Temecula, Calif., where as a first sergeant he supervises 52 Army recruiters at five recruiting stations. "We built a relationship that we could understand and trust each other, and I could show him a different life than everybody else could. I saw where there was, not a hole, but somewhere where I fit in his life where I could help him and show him different parts that he wasn't experiencing with his parents or in the city of Pahokee."

Jenkins, in an expansive interview following a workout at the Giants facility, said he's been welcomed by his new teammates, hangs out with Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie — his new running mate at cornerback — senses a "championship mindset" in the building and appreciates the unexpected, constant presence of general manager Jerry Reese and co-owner John Mara.

"Seeing them one time a year, you don't get no vibe. You know what I'm saying?" Jenkins said. "Just seeing them around more makes you feel like, 'I got to put everything on the table for this guy.' "

Call me 'Jackrabbit'

You put out your hand and say, "Nice to meet you, Janoris," and his response is, "It's Jackrabbit."

Vance Bedford, an assistant coach at the University of Florida, offered up that nickname before Jenkins ever played in a game after seeing the raw freshman, not knowing what he was doing, running all over the place. Jenkins grew up in a small town on the shore of Lake Okeechobee, not-very-affectionately called "Muck City," actually chasing jackrabbits.

"For fun, money, just to eat," Jenkins said. "Bring it home, clean it, cook it, eat it. I cleaned it, but I didn't cook it, give it to my mom. I love it — if you cook it the right way. Deep fried, season it. I like Janoris, but I feel Jackrabbit is like me. I'm from the muck, chase rabbits, and Jackrabbit sounds pretty good."

Jackrabbit ran afoul of the law in Gainesville, where he was a three-year starter but was hit with three arrests in a 23-month period. He was arrested in 2009 after his freshman year for his involvement in a bar fight — he claimed he was worried about his gold chain getting stolen — and a taser was used to subdue him. In 2011, he was picked up twice in a three-month period for marijuana possession. Then-head coach Will Muschamp, four months on the job, kicked his all-SEC cornerback off the team.

On the four-hour ride from Gainesville to Pahokee, Jenkins, his father, William Jenkins Sr., and Cornelio commiserated and strategized.

By this point, Cornelio had become a central figure in Jenkins' life. As a teenager, Jenkins asked Cornelio if he would take him to some football camps, maybe visit a few colleges, and Cornelio obliged. Jenkins' father and mother, Denise Dent, were always a part of their son's life, but Cornelio was younger, worldly. Something clicked, something different, special.

Jenkins calls Cornelio "C" when they have something serious to discuss and "Turtle" most other times.

"He looks like a Ninja Turtle," Jenkins said, laughing. "I mean, he's got glasses, bald head, Army guy, short, kind of walks with a hump in his back. He looks like a turtle. He don't take offense. He's like my brother, basically, my mentor."

On the ride home following expulsion, applying for the NFL's Supplemental Draft was discussed, but Jackrabbit did not like the idea, feeling that would be running and hiding from his problems.

"I wanted to show everybody I was a kid. I made some mistakes. I can fix my mistakes," he said. "Show people I wasn't the kid that was being painted."

The portrait being painted was of a weed-smoking, high-risk kid. Bad news. Trouble. At the time, he had fathered four children, all under the age of 3, with three different women — a roster that now includes five children with four women.

Cornelio saw a kid from a small town who could not handle being the big man on campus. Marijuana, Jenkins said, "was something I tried in college. I liked it for a point, and then at some point, I realized it will get me back to the hood or gonna get me incarcerated, but it ain't gonna get me where I want to be, and I left it alone."

He insists he's never consumed alcohol — ever.

"I just don't see the point in drinking," he said.

The decision was made for Jenkins to play his senior year at North Alabama, a Division II school, and he stayed clean at that outpost in Florence, Ala., and became a 2012 second-round pick of the Rams.

"We went through a whole lot, and we was blessed," said Jenkins Sr., a truck driver. "Janoris had the support of God himself No. 1, his father and a great mentor. Almighty God believed in all of us."

His troubled past cost him a first-round selection and millions of dollars. In his four years in the NFL, he's never failed a drug test. The only strike against him was a one-game suspension as a rookie for a violation of team rules.

"He got exposed to a fame that he wasn't expecting," Cornelio said. "You go from 6,000 people in your whole community and society to a stadium of 90,000. I think life moved too fast for him, and maybe we didn't have the structure that we needed to have at the time. And we learned from it."

The structure consists of Jackrabbit, his father, financial advisers, agents Neil Schwartz and Jonathan Feinsod and Cornelio, who serves as the point man for all decisions. The Giants did their due diligence before making Jenkins the second-highest-paid cornerback in NFL history, behind Darrelle Revis, with a five-year, $62.5 million contract that includes $29 million in guaranteed money. A Giants source said they reached out to Rams scouts to get an inside opinion of the player they were about to pay a king's ransom.

"We asked, 'What kind of guy is he?' " the Giants source told The Post. "They said, 'We had red flags too when he was coming out, but he's matured and he's never been in trouble and he's never tested positive. And he's a good guy in the locker room.' They said he's not THE guy, but he's not a minus, either."

Cornelio: The man with the plan

Once again, Jenkins moves into a bigger environment, with all the bright New York lights that surely can be seen and felt from the condo in Fair Lawn, NJ, he will soon move into.

"He's ready," Cornelio said. "There's a plan. He understands. I will be shocked if we had an issue. He understands how to slow life down. Today we have a plan every day how we're going to conquer that day."

Jenkins nearly had football taken away once and vows he is not going to go anywhere near that road again. Not going to follow the path of his older brother, who Jackrabbit says "has been incarcerated since I was 14."

William Jenkins is scheduled to be released soon from the Attica Correctional Facility in upstate New York.

"Drug-related charges ... typical," Jenkins said.

There is too much at stake here.

"Certain places you turn up, certain places you can't turn up," Jenkins said. "I wasn't ever gonna be the guy in the club on top of the tables bringing 20 girls in, drinking bottles. I wasn't going to be that guy because that's not me.

"If I'm at a party and somebody's trying to hand me something that I don't do or I don't need, first of all, I'm gonna leave the party. Now I know when I'm partying with you, I can't hang around you on that level, I got to separate myself. I'm gonna tell you no every time, and if you get offended, that's on you."

Jackrabbit and Turtle talk several times a week, sometimes every day.

"They are like brothers right now. There's a bond that I would say God put together," Jenkins Sr. said. "With a person like 'C' coming into Janoris' life as a total stranger, he really helped me along the way understand certain things about Janoris. I'm very, very happy to have Janoris as close to him as he is.

"He doesn't ask for anything in return, just love and respect for Janoris. I thank God for it every day of my life. We trust him, we love him, and they love each other, and we love each other. We all have a role. 'C' never tries to be Janoris' father. Never, never."

Cornelio is married with two children and said he has no financial arrangement with Jackrabbit.

"The only thing Janoris will pay for," Cornelio said, "is so I can eat if we go to lunch or dinner together. He goes, 'Hey, I make a little more than you do.' I get a burger and fries for being the mentor.

"What do I get out of Janoris? The enjoyment of seeing a young man succeed in America. I'm not saying he would have never succeeded without me. But being part of his life, to see him succeed after all these rough patches, it just makes me happy. For me to see him make it brings me joy. That's what I get out of it."

Jenkins knows what he has.

"I mean I'm blessed," he says. "I have me, my dad and my mentor."

Welcome to the McAdoo Era

By Jenny Vrentas

MMQB

July 30, 2016

The Giants' first team meeting of the 2016 season began at 11:55 a.m. on Thursday. The clocks here are still set to Tom Coughlin time, five minutes fast. But there's a new man at the front of the room.

Ben McAdoo has been head coach of the Giants for 198 days, but his most important speech to date happened two days ago. The start of training camp is when you set the table for the new season, and McAdoo didn't play it safe.

McAdoo's start-of-camp address lasted "two touch-downs," as he puts it—exactly 14 minutes in length. First, he set a clear, lofty goal for the 2016 season: Put the fifth Lombardi Trophy in the Giants' display case. Then, he took his message outside the white lines.

"I wanted to hit the issues that are going on in the world today. I think that was important," McAdoo says. "It's not easy to talk about. The racial tension going on in the world, the sexual assaults that are happening on campuses, the tension with law enforcement and the terrorism. And then I came back around and we talked a little bit about, we can make a difference, and we can do it maybe one person at a time. As long as we keep empathy and our message as we lead, as we communicate, I think we can make a difference. And the NFL is a great platform to do that."

This is the start of the answer to a question that's been simmering since January: Who is Ben McAdoo, head coach? The 39-year-old quietly rocketed up the coaching ladder, from an assistant high school coach in his hometown of Homer City, Pa., 20 years ago, to Packers position coach, to the chair previously occupied by Tom Coughlin and Bill Parcells in the nation's biggest media market. The daunting shadow cast by those two coaching legends, and their four combined Lombardis, has not fazed McAdoo any more than the criticism of his ill-fitting suit at his introductory press conference—which is to say, not very much at all.

"I am comfortable in my own skin," McAdoo says. "I don't worry about that, not one bit. Be yourself; everybody else is taken."

The Giants haven't had a new coach in 12 years, so the subtle changes observed at the team facility seem exponentially more noticeable. There's a redone weight room and new training philosophy under Aaron Wellman, a strength and conditioning coach McAdoo worked alongside as a grad assistant at Michigan State in 2001. Music is piped in during practices, and McAdoo even schedules gameday-like TV timeouts, rest breaks during which theme songs from shows like "Family Feud" are played over the loudspeakers. McAdoo has vowed to "build up" the players over the first few days of camp, and in keeping with that, the first practice of training camp on Friday morning lasted just 1 hour, 20 minutes, and included no 7-on-7 or 11-on-11 team drills. That wouldn't have been the style of Parcells or Coughlin, but for a team snakebitten by injuries over the past few years, a gradual start seems to be a calculated move.

But it's McAdoo's approach to commanding a room of 90 players that really reveals what his personality as a head coach will be. Just as with presidential candidates, you can never tell exactly how a person will act in office until they're in office. As the Giants' offensive coordinator the past two years, McAdoo led the offensive meeting room, but the leap to the head-coaching chair is a quantum one. McAdoo had never met with the media regularly until two years ago, and this spring he was answering questions about his star receiver's presumed relationship with a Kardashian. "I like the football questions better than I do some of the other stuff," McAdoo admits, "but when you are standing at the podium, everything is fair game." McAdoo says he and his old boss exchanged voice messages before camp started, but Coughlin is now a degree separated from his old team, working in the league office as a senior advisor to the football operations department. For years it was Coughlin's motivational slogans plastered in blue block letters all over the team facility, a daily reminder of the messages that had propelled his team to two Super Bowl runs. But after four seasons of missing the postseason, the Giants organization turned to a different messenger.

McAdoo spent his summer vacation—his "prep-cation," as he dubbed it—plotting what that message would be and how he would deliver it. He and his wife, Toni, who was his high school sweetheart, and their two young kids, went out of town for a couple weeks. "South," and "near a nice little body of water," were the only location details the private McAdoo would disclose. In the afternoon, while the kids napped, McAdoo worked.

He went over the camp schedule in extreme detail, making sure "every rep is accounted for." Last offseason Coughlin had commissioned a study and put his staff through training on teaching millennials, and McAdoo has doubled-down efforts to connect with a new generation of players. He came up with the idea of teaching in the segments of time referred to as one or two "touch-downs," reasoning that 20-something players would retain information better in shorter bursts. "I'll be sticking and moving, and they'll have to be paying attention," McAdoo says.

McAdoo credits Packers coach Mike McCarthy, whom he worked under for eight years in Green Bay and another year before that on his offensive staff in San Francisco, as his greatest coaching influence. Being a part of the of the Packers' Super Bowl XLV coaching staff helped inform McAdoo's "lesson plan" for the first two weeks of camp. In 14 separate lessons, each one a "touchdown" or two in length, McAdoo plans to lay the groundwork for what he believes are the Four Elements of Championship Football: (1) Strong leadership. (2) Talented men and women of integrity. (3) A positive work environment. (4) Comprehensive structure and function. "I really made this job into its own lesson plan," McAdoo explains, "so we'll see how it goes."

He sounds a lot like Coughlin here: organized, task-oriented and a little bit nerdy. Replacing your old boss who'd still like to be coaching isn't the most comfortable position, but McAdoo has done well at building on the past while forging his own way forward. Case in point: He talked about putting a fifth Super Bowl trophy in the Giants' lobby, and now he's giving his players his own road map for doing it.

That brings us back to the second part of McAdoo's opening day speech. It's bold enough to talk about the Super Bowl; it's even bolder as a first-year head coach to broach topics like racial tension and gun violence and sexual assault. But McAdoo thought, if he was going to stand in front of a room of 90 men he is charged with leading, he was going to talk about Orlando and Baton Rouge and Dallas and Baylor. It fits with the way he describes his new job: A responsibility.

"Well, it's real. We are in bunker mentality, then all of a sudden you get a couple weeks away from here, and you are like, what's going on out here?" McAdoo says. "The thing that is tough, they are looking at me like, this guy is a white man; he's the head coach of the Giants before he is 40 years old; how can he identify with us? I just told them, 'Hey, I have never walked in the shoes of a black man. I have never walked in the shoes of a woman. I have never walked in the shoes of a police officer, or I have never walked in the shoes of someone in a religion other than what I know. But I choose empathy over violence.'"

It was authentic. And the players responded well. "None of the guys probably would have expected it. I mean, I didn't expect for him to touch on that topic," says defensive end Olivier Vernon, one of the Giants' big-ticket free agent signings. "To me, it showed that he cares about what else is going on, not just football. Outside of football, there is still a world going on, there are problems out there, so for him to touch on that and have some type of awareness for it was a good thing."

The NFL is wondering who Ben McAdoo, head coach of the Giants, will be. His players, and the rest of us, are starting to get a clearer picture.

Giants' weight room reflects shift in Ben McAdoo era

By Conor Orr

New head coaches are typically allowed a certain amount of leeway when it comes to interior decorating at a team's facility, but the Ben McAdoo era looks and feels similar to what came before at first glance. The clocks are still five minutes fast -- former coach and current NFL senior advisor Tom Coughlin told McAdoo not to mess with them on McAdoo's first day as the team's offensive coordinator in 2014 -- and the Lombardi Trophies are still polished and on display in the main lobby. The corridor between the cafeteria and the locker room is still lined with pictures of the team's most legendary players on one side and silver-plated versions of newspaper articles from their championship runs on the other. But continue north, down a hallway that leads to the player parking lot, and you'll finally realize that day-to-day management has changed hands. Welcome to the Giants' new weight room.

"All great athletes are great movers," head strength and conditioning coach Aaron Wellman, hired this year after McAdoo's promotion, said during a tour of the facility early Tuesday morning. "Not all great athletes are the strongest guys, but they're all efficient and they move well. Our mission is to maximize their strength, speed and power and minimize the amount of orthopedic stress we put on the body.

"Obviously, we're going to stress their bodies, but when we talk about orthopedic stress, we're talking about joint stress. We've put together a room that allows us to do all of that efficiently."

The 35-yard-long open-concept workout facility is the most definitive evidence that the team is moving into another era. Rows of new Keiser machines -- hulking, multi-use racks where players can perform anything from squats to gravity pull-ups -- line the area from end to end, with removable plyometric boxes at the foot of each contraption. Players have certain lifts customized by speed to their position. There are charts measuring perceived exertion. More space between machines means more room for dynamic warm-ups to protect players against strain.

On the far wall hangs one of McAdoo's cornerstone phrases: Sound, Smart, Tough. On another: Your Habits Determine Your Success. In a building that can sometimes resemble a museum, an homage to decades of past achievements, it's hard not to notice a new voice.

The change is emblematic of the much larger moves the team made this offseason. To understand the new weight room and staff is to understand what was beautiful but dusty about the previous regime. Over Coughlin's final years, strength and conditioning was the source of some of the more frequent -- but private -- complaints among certain players. According to several conversations with Giants over the last four years, they talked about the search for training help outside the facility, sometimes during the season. Some preferred a more movement- and strength-based regimen, even if the old program created two different Super Bowl rosters. The team radically overhauled its sports performance department in 2013 and its nutrition plan in 2014. Most players loved and respected their experienced strength staff, the key members of which had been with Coughlin since he took over in New York in 2004, but some also had an eye on how the rest of the NFL was operating.

According to Football Outsiders, the Giants led the NFL in Adjusted Games Lost due to injury each of the last three seasons.

It was a small chess move for McAdoo that could end up paying dividends. Once Wellman was installed in January, the floor plan was designed and the industrial equipment was ordered within a week. Late nights and early mornings stacked together so a new fitness shrine could be ready for minicamp.

"I'm just out there trying to be myself, trying to do what is best for the team," McAdoo said Tuesday, when asked what he's learned about his role over a few training camp practices. "I want to help the leaders and put them in a position to be successful."

Just outside of that weight room, another noticeable difference blares out of a massive sound system on the sideline. Under Coughlin, music would be peppered in, more frequently during looser Friday sessions. But McAdoo has it going for the majority of practice.

He spends hours in the heat crouched like an H-back staring into drills and uses "TV Time-Outs" -- a break announced over the loudspeaker accompanied by classic television show theme songs -- to correct errors in the previous drill on the fly. In those moments, he is every bit as tedious and impassioned as his former boss, and perhaps that is what the Giants were hoping for all along: change, but not radical change. Getting stronger, smarter. Getting better, faster. All while remembering the strength within the roots.

Olivier Vernon likes what he sees in Ereck Flowers

By Tom Rock
Newsday
August 5, 2016

Back home in Miami, Olivier Vernon has a jersey he eventually will get around to framing. He'll hang it up on a wall somewhere, someday, perhaps give it a special place in a collection.

Although he owns it, it's not his jersey. No, this one is an Ereck Flowers jersey.

The two University of Miami products exchanged their uniform tops last season after the Giants beat the Dolphins in a Monday night game. It was a sign of shared roots and also a symbol of their mutual respect for each other.

Although neither knew it at the time of the swap, they would become teammates in the offseason, and their relationship has continued to grow since Vernon arrived with the Giants as a free agent. Their lockers, in fact, are right next to each other. If Vernon wants another jersey from Flowers, or vice versa, he can just reach out and grab it.

They also are key pieces in each other's development. Day after day, practice after practice, Vernon and Flowers face each other on the field, Vernon playing right defensive end and Flowers playing left tackle.

"We're just trying to get each other better," Flowers said Friday. "Every day, we go out there and work."

The Giants like that. Especially for Flowers.

"Ereck Flowers is a young man who is learning to trust his technique," coach Ben McAdoo said. "He's fighting hard out there. OV is not someone who is going to make it really easy on him. So he's learning to battle with a good competitor out there."

The Giants want Vernon, whom they signed to a lucrative contract during the offseason, to live up to the millions of dollars they are paying him. For Flowers, though, they are expecting a bigger jump. As last year's first-round pick heads into his second season, the hope is that he will begin to show up as the kind of cornerstone tackle the Giants thought they selected.

He gave glimpses of that last season, but playing most of the year with a painful ankle injury — he said it didn't fully heal until late this spring — plus being thrust into the starting left tackle job because of injuries prevented Flowers from always playing his best.

The knock on Flowers since the Giants drafted him has been his technique. Last year, he admitted, he often went away from the things he was taught and just tried to fight his way through tough situations.

"The thing with Ereck is he's got a lot of ability, a lot of potential," offensive line coach Mike Solari said. "The key thing we have to do with Ereck is develop the consistency."

Vernon, for his part, thinks Flowers is close.

"Man, he's going to be a really good player," Vernon said. "As young as Flowers is, he's ahead of the game as far as what he knows and his athletic ability. Once he starts gaining more confidence in the game and he puts it with his athletic ability, he's going to be even better."

He also noted how receptive Flowers is to improving.

"I remember when I was in that same position, going into my second year and trying to learn everything I can," Vernon said. "That's what he's pretty much doing. Always asking questions and we're always sharing knowledge."

The exchange, it seems, goes beyond the jerseys.

Giants' Weston Richburg on football-player Jesus and Odell's shadow

By Steve Serby
New York Post
August 6, 2016

Giants center Weston Richburg blocked out some time for some Q&A with Post columnist Steve Serby.

Q: Do you think you can be the best center in the league?

A: I do.

Q: What drives you?

A: I think one of the biggest things is fear of failure. I don't want to fail. I'm in the highest level of the sport, and I could be content and just say, "Oh, I'm here, whatever." But I think each level I go up, I want to be the best. And I've seen myself do things that makes me believe that I can be better. And I never want to get complacent with how I play. I'm real hard on myself, but I think it's good because it keeps me getting better.

Q: What is your on-field mentality?

A: I try to get pretty pissed off, but like a controlled anger, I guess, controlled aggression. Because I'm a guy that's gotta be making calls, and figuring out what's going on, reading things. But then I've also gotta be able to come out and put my pads onto somebody, move some guys around. I would probably call it controlled aggression.

Q: How different do you have to be on the field?

A: I'm a Christian and I believe that we should love people ... you should serve people. And that's something I really gotta work on, on the field. Some people think Christians aren't gonna play hard, they're not gonna get after people. But I don't believe that at all. I think I've gotta go out and be intense, super intense, and just be relentless. I always think how if Jesus was a football player, how would he play? He would be dominating people. I'm supposed to be an imitator of what he did when he was on earth. So I'm trying to go out there, be intense as I can, and I gotta keep my mouth shut. Just go play ball. 'Cause there's gonna be words said and stuff, just go play ball, that's my job, do that, and get out of there.

Q: Your rookie year you got into a fight, didn't you?

A: I got fined, yeah, I speared Fletcher Cox, I think it was. That's something I'd like to change. Sometimes my mouth gets going, and it's not part of the game. I need to be physical. Go play football.

Q: What style of center do you think you are?

A: I want to be one that knows where everything's coming from. I think some guys in the league now that are known for being really smart guys, I want to have some of that in my game. But I also want to be a guy that's physical, that can get out, put his pads up under somebody, move somebody off the ball, and make plays downfield.

Q: Why will this be a breakout year for you?

A: I want to keep getting better, and I think I made a good stride in my second year going to center. I think it's time for me to kind of take my mental game to the next level, be able to kind of help direct traffic better, so that'll help me be more aware of what's happening and make some better plays according to what I see.

Q: Can you be the Giants' Nick Mangold?

A: I could be the Giants' Weston Richburg.

Q: Mangold has been the Jets' center since 2006.

A: He's been very solid for them. So yeah, I would love to be one of the cornerstone pieces of this team. It's gonna take work, it's gonna take some dedication, but I love being a Giant for sure.

Q: What are your personal goals?

A: Super Bowl. That's why we're here. Like he [coach Ben McAdoo] always says, "Put another trophy in the case."

Q: Is that a realistic goal for this team?

A: Definitely is. We're one of the 32 teams in the league that has a chance to do it. If there's a team playing in the league that doesn't have the goal of winning the Super Bowl, what's the point?

Q: Your first two years were 6-10 and 6-10. How sick are you of the losing?

A: Yeah, yeah. It can't happen anymore. We're not happy with it, that's not why we're here.

Q: Do you sense a hunger in this group to get back to the glory days?

A: I think so, yeah, yeah. I definitely can sense that. Like I said, our purpose here is to put another trophy in the case. There's not a bowl game we can go, there's not anything like that. Our purpose here is to win a Super Bowl.

Q: How explosive can this offense be?

A: Very explosive. Obviously, the names at the wide receiver position speak for themselves. The guy that we have back there slinging the ball speaks for himself with what he's done in his career. Us up front, we're ready to get the ball going in the run game, and I think once we get that going, it'll be very explosive.

Q: You're confident you can run the ball better than you did a year ago?

A: No doubt.

Q: Why do you say that?

A: I think we've paid more attention to detail now. [Offensive line coach Mike] Solari's done a really good job of focusing on those tiny details, whether it be hat position, hand placement, where our steps in regards to if it's outside zone, inside zone. I think we've paid much more attention to those tiny details, and I think that's gonna help us.

Q: What's it like being "the other" draftee in Odell Beckham Jr.'s draft class?

A: (Smile) I get called Justin Pugh all the time.

Q: By who?

A: Everybody. Not everybody, but it happens quite a bit. And I'm OK with that.

Q: You mean when you're outside?

A: Yeah, yeah. It's hilarious, because I can go around incognito, just be myself. It doesn't bother me one bit, and it's cool to see Odell get all that attention 'cause he deserves it, man. He's an unbelievable player. I think it's kind of cool that I can kind of tell my kids one day that I was drafted in the same class as that guy, because he's a very impressive, very talented player.

Q: Does it in any way give you incentive to show that you're ever bit the draft choice that he is?

A: Oh yeah. I obviously have to do it in a different way, 'cause I don't get to score touchdowns and make three-fingered catches and stuff like that (smile). But yeah, I think we take pride in it, too. I'm sure it comes in every draft class, guys want to be the draft class that helps turn things around or helps bring success to an organization, so I think we definitely have pride in our class.

Q: Compare Eli Manning's hands under center to your Colorado State QB Garrett Grayson, who is now a backup for the Saints.

A: Eli's more firm. I've never been asked that question before (smile). But he's more firm and uh ... but we make it work. It's good.

Q: So Garrett was more ... what?

A: I knew he was there, but you feel Eli, he's there. And Garrett sometimes maybe you didn't feel it as much. Some guys are like that, some guys are really up in there, you can feel 'em, and some guys are not in there so much, you just kind of have to adjust.

Q: Describe coach McAdoo.

A: I would say he's the same guy that he was two years ago, last year — [just a] different title. Some guys may change, he's the same guy, which you can really respect from him. It's easy to go play for a guy like that.

Q: How does he command a room?

A: It's easy to play for him because you know he cares about you. He's gonna help you out. He's not just here to boss you around or whatever. He cares. That makes it easy for us to pay attention in meetings and on the field, things like that.

Q: Describe Giants fans.

A: Very loyal. I came from a smaller college where the fan base is smaller, but here, New York Giants fans are worldwide. I go back in my hometown, and there are people with a Giants sticker on their trucks. It's cool to represent kind of a global image.

Q: Do you like playing in the spotlight of this market?

A: Yeah, it's cool, it's really cool. It's very unique. It's something that not a lot of people get to do, so I'm soaking it up.

Q: Some guys are scared.

A: You gotta know how to handle it. I was on social media for a little bit, I'm not on it anymore. It can get you if you read into it too much. You're never as good as they say, you're never as bad as they say, so I just try to block it all out.

Q: Who's been the toughest inside or middle linebacker you've had to deal with so far?

A: NaVorro Bowman with San Fran. He's just real slippery. He was hard to kind of front up and stay in front of. He was real good at getting off blocks.

Q: How about Carolina's Luke Kuechly?

A: Smart. I think he knew every play that we were running, and I think we still rushed for a good amount, but he was very smart. We had to kind of give him fake calls and stuff.

Q: Describe linemate Ereck Flowers.

A: He's quiet. He's very strong, I like his attitude. He'd be guy I'd take into an alley if we were in a fight, because I know he's gonna battle to the end.

Q: Pugh.

A: He's one of my good friends here. It's cool to see him come in at guard and play really well. I think the future's bright.

Q: John Jerry.

A: I don't think he gets the credit he deserves. He's a great teammate, really, really solid teammate.

Q: Marshall Newhouse.

A: I don't think he gets the credit he deserves either. He's a really smart player, I never have to question if he's gonna go the right thing or not.

Q: Coach McAdoo wants this to be a heavy-handed team. What does that mean to you?

A: We're gonna go out, and punch 'em in the mouth, I guess. We're not gonna back down, start the game off first quarter through the fourth quarter being physical, kind of imposing our will on the defense, and our defense imposing their will on the offense.

Q: What have you learned about new Giants defensive lineman Damon "Snacks" Harrison?

A: He's a run stopper. He's gonna push the pocket in the pass game. He is an enormous human being who can take up blocks. Good man, too, good dude, really good dude.

Q: Johnathan Hankins.

A: Man, for as big as he is, he's quick. He's got good pass rush skills, and he's also a good run stopper.

Q: Olivier Vernon.

A: Strength. Lots of strength there, lots of speed. He doesn't talk much but he makes plays. I think he's gonna be a huge asset for us.

Q: Jason Pierre-Paul.

A: I don't think I have to say anything about him. He's a guy that does things I have never seen a human do before. The way he moves, it's kind of something you can just sit back and be like, "Wow, that's impressive."

Q: Does he seem more comfortable with his hand?

A: Yeah, yeah. You forget it's even what it is now, because he's using it, there's no cast or anything.

Q: Describe your offseason work in Arizona with offensive line guru LeCharles Bentley.

A: He's been a mentor to me. He's been there, done that.

Q: What was so great about growing up in Bushland, Texas?

A: Everybody knew everybody. My graduating class in high school was 82 people. We were acquaintances with everyone. Friday night everybody went to the football game. It's kind of in the country, so I got to do all kinds of agricultural stuff, we showed pigs, we showed cows. Me and my dad raised cows out there. I didn't feel like a small fish in a big pond.

Q: So how much of a culture shock was it coming to the Big Apple?

A: Huge. Huge. It's not only totally different, with buildings, and big highways, and stoplights ... like my town, I don't think it has a stoplight. We're 15 minutes from a bigger town that does, but where our school is, it's small. The people are the biggest difference. Just something about Texas people, maybe it's just because that's where I'm from, but they're really easy to get along with down there. Maybe it's just 'cause there's so much fewer people in the Panhandle of Texas. But up here, man, didn't they call it a concrete jungle or something? It really is, going into the city is a pretty overwhelming experience just because there's so much going on. It's kind of like a melting pot too of ethnicities and cultures and stuff. Me and my wife have loved it, it's been really cool.

Q: Favorite New York City things?

A: I want to go to Peter Luger's, because I heard their steak is phenomenal. Me and wife enjoy going to sporting events, we've been to a Knicks game, we've been to a couple of hockey games.

Q: Any theater?

A: I want to take her to Broadway, but I haven't had a chance to yet. I went and saw "Lion King" way back in the day when I was a kid.

Q: How old were you?

A: Fourth, fifth grade maybe.

Q: Any memories of New York back then?

A: Ground Zero was just a hole, it was a big hole. This was a couple of years after 9/11, they were still cleaning up a little bit. I remember going to Times Square, which was awesome. I remember the Foot Locker there, I bought a pair of tennis shoes at the Foot Locker — I don't know why, I coulda done at home, but we were at Times Square, so might as well.

Q: What was it like visiting Ground Zero at that time?

A: I knew it was a big deal, because a couple of years earlier watched it on TV and seen what kind of tragedy it was. And to be there and actually see that site where a huge part of our history occurred, I think it affected me, it was kind of a somber experience. We went to it, I guess, two years ago with [Tom Coughlin] during training camp and got to see the whole memorial. ... It's a pretty intense experience for sure.

Q: A scouting report on your wife, Marlee.

A: She is a very thoughtful person, really good heart. She's very, very kind. She's a servant, she's really good at putting others first, which is something I need to learn from. And she has the best memory that I've ever en-encountered. I forget things all the time, but she's like a calendar, she remembers every single thing, which I really admire about her.

Q: Hobbies?

A: Me and my dad have cattle back in Texas, we actually just branded and castrated the bunch of 'em this past offseason.

Q: Three dinner guests?

A: Jesus, David, George Strait.

Q: Favorite movie?

A: "The Patriot."

Q: Favorite actor?

A: Christian Bale.

Q: Favorite actress?

A: Scarlett Johansson.

Q: Favorite singer/entertainer?

A: I'm a big metal head. Metallica ... Fit For A King ... August Burns Red. ... Give shout outs to 'em. Hopefully they read it, it'd be cool (smile).

Q: Favorite meal?

A: I'm a big soup guy — chicken dumplings, chicken noodle soup, tomato basil soup, clam chowder. Love it.

Q: What do you want the mindset of this team to become Week 1?

A: Finish. Every play, every game.

Q: Message to Giants fans?

A: We're in this all together. We're going for it all.

The People I Play For

By Sterling Shepard
The Players Tribune
August 12, 2016

One of my favorite memories as a kid is when my dad took me to the racquetball courts with him. While he played, I would sit on the other side of the glass wall and try to follow the little blue rubber ball as my dad blasted it around the court. My dad wasn't a big guy — he was only 5-foot-10 — but to me, he was a giant.

He was my dad.

He was my hero.

He was so athletic, and a workout maniac. Those racquetball games would usually be his third workout of the day. And when he was done playing, he'd let me come in and hit the ball around a little. I didn't understand any of the rules. I just went in there and smashed the ball as hard as I could to see how fast I could get it to bounce off the wall — to see if I could do it like my dad.

Afterwards, we would grab a bite to eat. When we got home, he would always say the same thing to my mom.

"The kid's got some good form."

He was always saying things like that. Whether I was throwing a baseball, dribbling a basketball, catching a football or swinging a racquet, he always said that I was naturally athletic. As a result, he was always coaching, always teaching. When we would watch football on TV, he wouldn't let me just watch as a fan. He'd tell me to focus on certain players, like it was film study or something.

I was six.

My dad, Derrick Shepard, played five years in the NFL. By 1999, he had been out of the league for a few years and he was a graduate assistant at Oklahoma under Bob Stoops, who had just taken over as head coach. Years earlier, my dad had been a walk-on wide receiver at Oklahoma, where he won a national championship. His two older brothers also played for the Sooners. So even though my dad played for three different teams during his NFL career, when it came to college football for the Shepard family, it was all Boomer Sooner.

Then he got his first coaching break — an offer to be the wide receivers coach at Wyoming. In the summer before that 1999 season, my dad left Norman for Laramie while my mom stayed behind to prepare me and my two sisters for the move. We were planning to meet him after the season.

My parents had met in school at Oklahoma. My mom tells the story about how when she was a freshman and my dad was a senior, he'd always ask her out. But she'd never talk to him because — well, my dad's from West Texas, so he was a country boy. It was the '80s, so he had a Jheri curl, too. And whenever he'd go up to my mom, she'd say, "I'm not talking to you till you cut that Jheri curl off."

So he did! He cut it off, took another shot at my mom, and she finally went out on a date with him.

The rest is history. My mom says he asked her over the phone to marry him. He called her up and said, "You wanna get hitched?" And she said, "Yeah, sure." Or something like that ... my mom tells it better.

But there was a secret my dad kept from my mom.

My dad had an enlarged heart. He had known about it for a few years, and his doctors had told him not to do anything too strenuous or anything sports related. But he'd been an athlete his entire life. Like I said, he was a workout maniac. Always had been. So when the doctors gave him heart medication, I guess he used it to keep his condition in check as best he could and went about his normal life, workouts and all.

About a month after he got to Wyoming, while the rest of us were still back in Norman, he was playing racquetball one night — most likely his third workout of the day — when he had a heart attack and died. He was 35 years old.

I know it goes without saying, but it's tough losing a parent, especially when you're young. It's even tougher when you're a young boy and you lose your father, and suddenly you're the man of the house. I wondered, Who's gonna take care of my mom? Who's gonna protect my sisters?

Most of all, I wondered what my new, fatherless life was going to be like.

Suddenly a single mother of three, my mom moved the family 30 minutes up the road to Oklahoma City so we could be closer to my grandparents. Even though my grandparents were there to help out, she basically raised us three kids by herself. She worked her tail off every day, and she never complained. She was a rock.

She was my rock.

But there was somebody else who stepped in to fill the void left by the death of my father — someone who went out of his way to look after me, and in doing so, became a huge part of my life.

Coach Bob Stoops.

My dad never really got to see me play football. I started my first season of flag football a few weeks after he died, and I remember Coach Stoops and some of his assistants showed up at one of my practices. He hadn't known my dad for very long before he passed. It was only a few months between the time Coach Stoops took over at Oklahoma and when my dad left for Wyoming. He thought enough of my dad to speak at his funeral, which I thought said a lot about the impression my dad had made on him in such a short time.

Coach Stoops comes from a football family. His three brothers are also coaches and they had all been coached by their dad in high school, so he knows what it's like to grow up with a football dad and around a football program — the way I had been on track to grow up before my dad passed.

Coach Stoops wanted to make sure that I didn't miss out on that experience just because my dad was gone.

When he came to my flag football practice that day, he told my mom that I was welcome anytime at Sooners practices or games — that the football part of my life didn't have to die along with my father. It was an unbelievably gracious gesture.

And I took advantage.

I was just a kid, so I didn't realize how special it was to get to stand on the sidelines and spend time in the locker room with the team. I just loved it. I went every chance I got. If you went to a Sooners practice or game, you probably saw me running around on the sideline wearing a number 3 Oklahoma jersey — my dad's number — just having a blast.

Because of Coach Stoops, I got to experience football as a kid in a way that, after my dad passed, I never thought I would.

Coach Stoops also taught me about my dad — you know, the coach, the man he was after he dropped me and my sisters off at school every morning. He talked about what a hard worker my dad was. How he did everything with a purpose. How he treated everybody well and made everybody feel important, but that nobody was ever more important to him than his family.

I have some great memories of my dad from when I was a kid — like those nights at the racquetball courts, or throwing the ball around with him in the yard, or how sometimes he would randomly stop on the way to school in the morning and take me and my sisters out for doughnuts. But between my mom and Coach Stoops's stories, even though my dad was gone, I was always learning new things about him.

That always made him feel alive to me.

I had to stop hanging around the Oklahoma football team once I got to high school because of NCAA rules. I had become a recruit, so I was only allowed to be around the program for official recruiting business. And even though I let the recruiting process play out and weighed all my options, when Coach Stoops eventually offered me a scholarship, it was a no-brainer that I was going to be a Sooner. I wanted to carry on the Shepard legacy.

I wanted to repay Coach Stoops for his kindness to me and my family over the years.

I felt really close to my dad during my time at Oklahoma — wearing his number 3 jersey, playing on the same fields he played on and in the same rivalry games he played in. I had an incredible four years at Oklahoma. It was everything I dreamed it would be as a kid, and more.

My only two regrets are that I wasn't able to help bring the Sooners a national championship, like my dad did ...

And that my dad wasn't there to watch me follow in his footsteps.

I put a lot of pressure on myself to build on my family's legacy at Oklahoma, and I like to think I did the Shepard men proud. But getting taken by the Giants in the second round of the draft this year gave me a chance to take it to another level.

My uncles never played in the NFL, but my dad did, and I want to surpass what he did in the pros. I also feel pressure to represent Oklahoma well in the NFL. That's very important to me.

There's also the fact that I'm truly away from home for the first time in my life. I literally grew up on the sidelines at Oklahoma games. Putting on that OU helmet and stepping on campus in Norman was as natural of a transition to college as I could have imagined.

Now I'm in New York ...

Well, New Jersey. But either way, it's a loooong way from Oklahoma.

I remember one of the first times we all went into the city together, all of us Giants rookies.

You remember David Tyree? Of course you do. We call him DT. He's the guy who made the "helmet catch" in Super Bowl XLII, when the Giants beat the Patriots.

Yeah. That guy.

Now he's the Giants' director of player development — basically, he's a mentor. And he took all us rookies out to dinner one night at Mastro's Steakhouse in New York City, right near Times Square.

I've never seen a traffic jam like that. It was like 6 or 7 p.m., and there were just so many people. The city was so big — but also so small ... It's hard to describe. I had just never sat for so long in a car that wasn't moving. I was thinking, Man, how can it take us so long to go such a short distance?

New York.

One of the first things I did after I got drafted was look at the Giants roster. I knew I was not only coming into a situation where I'd be playing alongside Odell Beckham Jr., one of the best receivers in the game, but also that the Giants have a great coaching staff. So I knew I was going to be getting a great football education. But I wanted to see who the vets were — the guys who could teach me the off-the-field, how-to-survive-in-the-league stuff. Coming in, I thought I was going to have to go it alone.

I had always had somebody there for me, even after my dad passed. My mom was there to take care of me and my sisters. My grandparents were there to help her. I could call one of my uncles if I needed football advice. Coach Stoops and his staff were always there for me, no matter what I needed.

Now, I thought, I'm on my own.

That's where DT comes in.

Every day after practice, all the rookies meet with DT. It's like a daily orientation. We also have one-on-one time with him. He made one of the most iconic plays in NFL history, but he's also a guy who survived in the league for six years. He played special teams — he did whatever he had to do, so he talks to us rookies about that side of the business, about doing everything we can on the field.

He has also turned out to be that veteran voice I was looking for when it comes to the off-the-field stuff. He played in New York, so he's able to draw from his personal experiences and from things he saw firsthand to educate us on how not to get caught up in the whole New York City thing. He teaches us how to be pros in practice and on game day, as well as when we're not at the facility.

The NFL used to have a rookie symposium that all the rookies who got drafted would attend. It was like a big seminar. Ex-players would come in and tell stories, teach guys how to manage their money, how to conduct themselves off the field — all that stuff.

This year, it was different. Instead of one big seminar for all the rookies, the league had a Rookie Transition Program, where each team held its own little rookie symposium. DT was one of the leaders of ours — we combined ours with the Jets rookies, since we're all here in New Jersey — so me and the other guys were comfortable with the whole thing. I think the fact that we were all together helped us a lot. Between the meetings after practice with DT, rookie outings like the one to Mastro's and all of us being together for the transition program, I'm going into my rookie season feeling like I'm already part of a family, surrounded by my brothers and guys like DT to help me out on the field and off.

Guys who can help look out for the Oklahoma boy who's on his own for the first time in the big city.

I can't imagine being in a better situation as a rookie.

DT always reminds us rookies that in the end, our time in the NFL will be such a short part of our lives, so we shouldn't take it for granted.

I don't.

I know from losing my dad at a young age that all of this could end tomorrow — football, everything — just like that. So, with a little help, I'm going to do everything in my power to make the most of every day and every opportunity, and to make everybody from my mom and Coach Stoops, to the University of Oklahoma, to Giants fans and my new Giants family — and especially my dad — proud.

Weather the Storm

By Damon Harrison
The Players Tribune
August 18, 2016

As I looked over the edge of the Sarto Old Iron Bridge into the Bayou des Glaises, I was scared as hell. I was just 15. It was a drop of more than 30 feet to the water below. My palms were sweaty and my legs were trembling. The more I stared into the water trying to gauge how deep it was, the more I kept thinking about killing myself.

Just jump off the bridge, Damon.

I don't know how to swim, but that was the least of my worries. I was so lost and distraught that ending my life actually seemed preferable to what I was currently facing.

My family is gone.

I have nowhere to go.

Still, I controlled my own destiny. I had a choice to make. And what occurred next defines me more than anything that's happened to me before or since — more than making it to the NFL, more than signing a big contract with the Giants, and surprisingly, even more than reuniting with my family.

I'm from Lake Charles, La., where I grew up the youngest of three children. When you're from Southern Louisiana, there are two things you learn at a young age.

First, the word creole involves more than just food. It's a culture. It's our way of living. It's the way we speak. It's everything.

Second, hurricanes are a part of life. The threat of devastation is always hanging over you — especially in Lake Charles.

Unfortunately, my family couldn't afford to leave every time a storm was on the way. So we usually did what most people in our projects did when we got news that a hurricane was coming.

We boarded up the windows.

Every time, it was the same routine — measure the windows, buy five-by-eight sheets of plywood, cut half an inch on all sides so they would fit, and then drill holes for nails. We had it down to a science with how precise we were when we nailed the plywood over the windows of our house.

But what happened in September of 2005 was different. Boards weren't going to be enough. To people outside of Louisiana, Hurricane Rita is considered the "forgotten storm" because it hit the coast in September 2005, less than a month after Hurricane Katrina. But we could tell from the start that Rita was going to be bad.

I can still hear the knocks on our apartment door when local officials were telling us to evacuate.

"Get out now!"

After a few minutes of confusion, my family began to scramble. I can remember my mom going from room to room gathering photo albums, birth certificates and other forms of identification. In her mind, making sure we had our I.D.'s was important, especially if she had to identify a missing child. But to me, that wasn't what I cared about most. There was one thing I couldn't leave St. Edwards Subdivision without.

My Nokia phone.

When my mother and father divorced, my dad left me two things: a King James Bible and a Nokia phone. Not just any Nokia phone, but a gray Nokia 6610. The phone didn't have any minutes on it, but I always held it to my ear like I had an unlimited talk plan. I used to keep it charged so I could play Pong and Snake, and there was no way I was leaving without that phone. To me that phone was an extension of my right hand, and if I had to leave home, it was coming with me.

After we packed and got on the road, everything seemed fine. There weren't any signs yet of wind or extreme weather. But the farther we drove on LA 106, the more the rain and wind picked up. The only thing you could make out was the blurry taillights in front of you. As I slouched under a tarp in the back of my uncle's flatbed truck, I split my time between playing on my phone and keeping an eye on my grandfather. He was in his car following us, but as the weather became more severe, his high beams became dimmer.

It wasn't long before he called my mother to say that he was heading back to his home in Lafayette to wait out the storm. My grandfather was a strong man — the cornerstone of our family. Despite being worried about him turning back, I was sure that I was going to see him again. After driving for hours, we finally made it to our evacuation location, Bunkie High School, about 80 miles away from Lake Charles.

From the moment we walked into the gym, it was a madhouse. As we settled in, we scouted high and low for a place to put our things, but there were only two spots available.

The gym floor and the bleachers.

The adults slept on the floor, while my sisters and I squeezed into the spaces between the seats of the retractable bleachers. It felt like we were sardines in a can, but that was our only option, so we made due.

Our first night there, I couldn't sleep. Images from Hurricane Katrina kept popping up in my head — the homes submerged underwater, the crying babies, the dead bodies floating in the water. I would wake up about every hour and pinch myself, just to make sure I was still alive and that I had only been dreaming.

Images from Hurricane Katrina kept popping up in my head — the homes submerged underwater, the crying babies, the dead bodies floating in the water.

Nights were tough, but as the days passed I began to look forward to the mornings. Mornings were the highlight of everyone's day because it was the only time people were not concerned about the storm. I loved waking up to the sounds of hymns being sung by church members, and children playing outside on the football field. It was like everyone could forget for a moment that a hurricane was approaching. But the thing that I most looked forward to every morning wasn't the church hymns or playing outside. It was something edible.

Specifically, the military rations served at breakfast.

These weren't regular military rations. These were special — the jambalaya and Skittles packs. If you were fortunate enough to get your hands on the jambalaya rations with the Skittles, you were treated like a king in the Bunkie High gym. But in order to snag these rations, you had to be one of the first in line.

So I devised a plan.

I would wake up at the crack of dawn — when everyone else was still asleep — and tiptoe over all the folks splayed out on the bleachers. I had to be light on my feet. One false step would result in eye contact, and once eye contact was made, your cover was blown. With every step I took, I had to take a peek below to make sure that I wasn't stepping on anybody's leg or hand. It felt like I was Indiana Jones and the jambalaya and Skittles pack was the Golden Idol in the Temple of Warriors.

It felt like I was Indiana Jones and the jambalaya and Skittles pack was the Golden Idol in the Temple of Warriors.

On some days, living in the gymnasium wasn't that bad. Aside from the long bathroom lines and the occasional petty theft, it was manageable. But other days were truly horrible, especially as the storm got closer.

Conditions were worsening. The wind and the rain were picking up, and their impact was starting to take a toll on the building. It seemed like with every rush of wind the screws and bolts that were holding the roof together would get looser and looser. On September, 24, 2005, the wind ripped the roof right off the gym. Almost instantly the rain started to pour in. It was mayhem.

Emergency officials directed us to take shelter in the hallways of the school. We spent almost the entire night there. It was dark. There were no lights except for some flashlights and candles. I just lay awake on the bare floor until morning while the storm raged outside.

The next day was hot and sunny. I went outside with my family. We were being directed to a new evacuation location.

I was the last person to reach my uncle's truck as my family packed it up to head to the new facility. When I got to the front passenger seat, I was immediately told by my uncle, "Damon, get your ass in the back of the flatbed."

I'll never forget it. I thought it was a joke — there was plenty of room in the front seat. But I realized that he was serious. He was actually trying to make me sit in the back seat. And for no good reason, from what I could tell. I didn't want to back down and be embarrassed in front of the new friends I had made at the gym, so I refused. I wasn't willing to sit in the back seat. I was 15 — old enough to sit in the front. So I stood my ground.

With my chest puffed out, I yelled back, "I'm not getting in the back of the truck when there is space in the front!"

My mother and sisters were already in the truck — Mom was in the front seat with my uncle, and my sisters were in the flatbed. They were pleading with me to just sit in the back. But I wasn't hearing it. My pride was at stake.

As the argument continued, my uncle revved the engine of his truck and pointed in the direction of the Greyhound buses in the front of the school.

"If you are not going to get in the truck and abide by my rules, those buses can take you," he told me.

I thought he was crazy. If I wasn't comfortable with getting in the flatbed of his truck, I definitely wasn't going to cram myself on a crowded bus. But before I could reply with a smart-ass comment, it happened.

I waited there in the scorching heat for about 20 minutes — waited for them to turn around and tell me they were only trying to teach me a lesson, but they never came back. I eventually raced to the front of the school where the emergency buses were located. I knew there were four Greyhound buses taking people to the next evacuation spot, but to my surprise, they had already departed.

Angry and pissed, I began to walk. I trudged down about 30 miles down the road in the sweltering heat and eventually came to the Sarto Old Iron Bridge. My mind was made up, I had reached my crossroads.

Initially, the only thought in my mind was to go to the edge of the bridge and take a plunge into the water. Everything that had led up to that point made me think that jumping would be the answer to my problems. There were so many emotions running through my mind.

I'm lost.

My family is gone.

I have nowhere to go.

As I closed my eyes and the temptation to jump grew stronger, I imagined how I would feel once I hit the water. Was it really going to solve my problems?

As I closed my eyes and the temptation to jump grew stronger, I imagined how I would feel once I hit the water. Was it really going to solve my problems?

And that's when I realized something.

I'm better than this.

This isn't how my story will end.

I got myself off the bridge. I walked for about five more miles, squinting every so often at the horizon in hopes of seeing a gas station or mini-mart. And then a small, red Jeep pulled up next to me, and the driver said, "Do you need a ride?"

I locked eyes with the man. He was elderly. I wasn't familiar with him, but he knew exactly who I was. He had been at Bunkie High and had seen my family drive away. He told me that he was on his way to Lafayette to reunite with his family. A few miles before he met me he had come to a fork in the road. He said that his GPS was telling him to go one way, but that something inside was telling him to go the other. Thirty miles into his trip he spotted me walking.

It was a lucky break. I couldn't believe what was happening, but I couldn't spend too much time thinking about it. I needed to go. I needed to see the one person in my family who, at that moment, I was sure I could count on.

The man in the Jeep drove me to Lafayette, where I planned to reunite with my grandfather. Because the storm had knocked out the telephone lines, I couldn't get in contact with him before I arrived. But luckily he was home when I got to Lafayette.

I stayed with him for a few weeks — and made him swear not to reveal to the rest of the family that I was alive and safe. My family was looking for me. They had even filled out a missing child report. But I didn't care. I was still upset. I didn't understand why they had left me, but I knew I couldn't keep holding on to my anger forever. I didn't want a grudge to get in the way of me making the most of my life.

So about a month later, I reconnected with my family in Lake Charles. When we reunited, it felt like the whole incident got swept under the rug. There was no apology. Nothing. It was almost like nothing had ever happened.

If it had been a few years earlier, I could have looked to my older brother, Joshua, for advice. But he had been in jail for theft since 2002. There was only me.

When I was standing on that bridge, I realized that there was only one person who was going to make something happen in my life.

Me.

The experience lit a match under my ass and made me appreciate my opportunities. But more importantly, it made me realize that if you want something, you go get it.

Period.

My senior year of high school, I was a lightly recruited kid who was working the overnight shift at Walmart. No one, at that point, would have given me a shot in hell of making it to a D-I program. But I was driven. I would get on my old HP computer for hours and send emails to every school I could think of, just to show my interest and to let them know that all I wanted was a shot.

I didn't have much tape, but I never doubted myself. When I wasn't stocking shelves for $14 an hour, I was on the field working on my craft. Every day it was the same schedule: Wake up, work out, go to school, go to practice, go to Walmart, repeat.

Every day it was the same schedule: Wake up, work out, go to school, go to practice, go to Walmart, repeat.

The grind eventually landed me at William Penn, a small NAIA school in Oskaloosa, Iowa. When I tell people where I went to college, they don't recognize the name at all. They expect to hear Florida, Alabama or even LSU. But I just tell them everyone's road is different. Whether I was playing in snowy conditions in middle of Iowa, or back home in Louisiana, I gave the game of football my all.

I wasn't drafted in 2012, and I became a free agent. I remember watching the draft and memorizing specific players who were selected instead me. When the Jets gave me a chance to try out, I went to work. Every time I got on the field, I was all business. When I came to the line of scrimmage, I would go back to that moment on the bridge — when I felt like I didn't have a friend in the world. I never wanted to feel that low again in my life. So anybody that was in my way, they were facing somebody who was hungry.

Hurricane Rita shaped the man I am today, the one that the sports world knows as Damon (Snacks) Harrison. Sometimes when I look back on my journey, I think of that boy who was stubborn as hell. What that boy had to do was put his pride aside and get in the back of the truck. It was that simple.

The moment on the bridge was my lowest. From that day, the only direction I could go was up. For anybody who is reading this and going through similar struggles, always remember that you can make it through. You can change your destiny.

And if you ever need a pep talk, let me know.

I have an unlimited talk plan now.

Giants attempt to reverse injury trend with new strength coach Aaron Wellman

By Pat Leonard
New York Daily News
August 21, 2016

The Giants' new strength and conditioning coach wakes up at 3:15 a.m. Maybe 3:30 a.m. when he sleeps in.

Aaron Wellman is in his office at the helm of Big Blue's glistening, revamped weight room by 4:15 with a focus so intense he could intimidate the sun into not rising, or more likely motivate it to reach its peak.

"If you want to 'Go Wellman,' man, you've got to go to a different place," says Giants safety Nat Berhe, a former Wellman disciple at San Diego State. "The guy is amazing. He would be in the (Aztecs') weight room lifting, it'd be 100 degrees and he'd have his poncho on, and everybody would be like, 'What?' The guy's unbelievable."

"This isn't a poncho," Wellman responds on Wednesday, wearing a light, short-sleeved track jacket. "Google 'poncho,' you will not see this. A poncho's like a rain coat. Nat doesn't know what he's talking about."

Ben McAdoo's hiring as head coach when the sun set on Tom Coughlin's 12 seasons was the Giants' most noteworthy staff change this offseason, but McAdoo is not the only one with heavy weight on his shoulders.

Wellman, 42, just three years McAdoo's senior, is here because of the injury history. There is no issue more sensitive to the Giants than their inability to stay healthy for many years under Coughlin. It might not be a coincidence they hired a guy named "Well-Man" to correct it.

The Giants have led the NFL for three straight seasons in the dubious category of Adjusted Games Lost, a stat kept by FootballOutsiders.com measuring cost of injuries in terms of missed games and games in which players are unable to play to their full potential. They owned the three highest totals in the web site's database since the year 2000.

The 2015 NFL average was 68.9 adjusted games lost. The Giants lost 138.7 games, more than double the average. Only one other team, division-rival Washington (119.1), lost more than 100 games. The 2014 Giants lost 137.1 games against a league average of 74.3, and the 2013 team lost 144.6 games, more than double that season's NFL average of 70.2.

This is why GM Jerry Reese opened his camp press conference on July 31 by emphasizing how "big" a move the team had made with its "offseason program." It is why McAdoo has managed his veterans' workloads so carefully since the start of training camp.

"We changed the entire strength and conditioning program and the weight room," Reese said in his opening statement. "We invested a lot of money in the weight room to make some changes there. ... Ben is doing a nice job, I think, of trying to take these guys slowly and ramping them up to a certain degree. We are trying to avoid the injury bug, so this is part of our new routine."

Enter Wellman, coming off 20 years of Division-I college experience, into a cutthroat league often measured harshly and simply by statistics. So how exactly will the Giants determine whether he has succeeded?

It's not as clear cut as evaluating McAdoo, who could demonstrate improvement objectively by snapping a four-year playoff drought or upping the win total from Coughlin's back-to-back 6-10 seasons.

For Wellman, one player injury could be too many, depending on the player.

So does he feel that pressure?

"To be honest with you, I don't feel any pressure," Wellman told the Daily News Wednesday, standing on the Giants' weight room floor. "You can call my wife and ask her. Whether I'm at Paterson High School or here, I'm going to have the same amount of (pressure). I mean, I typically go home thinking about this, I go to bed thinking about this, and I wake up thinking about this: Are we doing everything possible to mitigate risk in every individual on this team?"

"That's the question I'm asking myself non-stop," Wellman added. "Are we putting our players in the best position to succeed from a performance standpoint and to keep them as safe as possible at the same time? So I don't feel a pressure any more so than I've felt it any other year. My goal as a strength coach is to improve performance, win football games, and a guy can't do either of those things if he's not on the field practicing and playing."

***

Wellman worked last season as Notre Dame's assistant director of strength and conditioning. Prior to that, he spent four years as the director at Michigan (2011-15), and a handful of years at San Diego State (2009-11) and Ball State (2004-09), rising with head coach Brady Hoke from Indiana to California to the Big House.

Berhe glows, though, about how Wellman “set the foundation” for a culture change at San Diego State, where the Aztecs catapulted to six straight bowl appearances corresponding to Wellman and Hoke’s arrival in 2009.

“The guy came in to work every day at 3 a.m., it was crazy,” said Berhe, who redshirted in 2009 before helping the Aztecs to the first of those six bowls in 2010, a 35-14 Poinsettia Bowl win over Navy. “He started to become this larger than life type figure. Nobody ever saw him without his poncho on. It was what the program needed... He pushes you to a different level.”

Berhe’s best example of how Wellman’s intensity rubbed off on the program related again to early mornings.

“At San Diego State, if you got in trouble or anything like that, if you like failed a drug test or something like that, they’d give you 30 days. And it wouldn’t be like 30 days of punishment. They called it 30 Days of Wellman,” Berhe said with a smile. “So you’d wake up in the morning at like 6 a.m. and you’d meet him out on the turf and you’d plate push 1,000 yards. Each day. For 30 days. And he’d be out there. Every day.”

Wellman says equating the Giants and San Diego State is comparing “apples to oranges.” He certainly does not view the Giants as in need of a culture change, given the legacy that has been cultivated by the Mara family and previous management and coaching regimes.

There is a reason, though, that Wellman is here and that former strength coach Jerry Palmieri was ousted despite 12 years and two Super Bowls with Coughlin. Back in 2004, Coughlin called the Giants’ high number of injuries under former head coach Jim Fassel “a cancer” and attributed them to being “a mental thing... as much as anything else.”

If it were mind over matter, Coughlin and Palmieri would not have had an epidemic of soft-tissue injuries, and if correcting it were as easy as upping the intensity, Wellman wouldn’t have any work to do.

So the obvious question is: What is Wellman doing differently than his predecessor?

***

Wellman is not naïve enough to promise to prevent injuries. That is not realistic.

But his methods and upgrades to the weight room demonstrate how he hopes to lower risk, and the attention to player health has been noticeable to big-money free agent signing, defensive end Olivier Vernon.

“They do take care of guys’ bodies over here,” Vernon said.

“I wouldn’t be able to do it without the staff. I’ve got a great staff,” Wellman said of Coughlin holdovers Markus Paul (10th season, assistant coach) and Joe Danos (performance manager) and intern Pete Remmes.

The Giants have opened up the room to create more space for these larger-than-life athletes to perform their sweeping exercises without impediment. They also have installed Kaiser air-resistance fitness machines to give players the option to work a specific muscle without always having to use heavy plates.

Air-resistance machines can help Giants players reach the weight they need without putting unnecessary stress on joints. Last year under Palmieri, one player called the weight lifting plan “more traditional,” or something closer to power lifting. Under Wellman?

“It’s about being able to move a weight functionally and not necessarily just lifting a heavy weight,” running back Andre Williams said.

For Wellman, the subjective measure of his success training athletes is all about movement.

“I look at how guys are moving on the field, because the one common denominator in all great athletes is movement,” he said. “Some guys are stronger than other guys, some guys are really strong and aren’t great movers. But all great players are also great movers. They move really well. Movement is subjective. When you’ve watched thousands of athletes over the course of 15-20 years you start to see things.”

He isolates a lot of muscles, like one-leg exercises, since usually a football player is moving and planting his weight on one leg at a time. He emphasizes “perfect technique,” so when a player increases weight on an exercise he is not changing his movement patterns, such as knees buckling during squats.

And he stresses the velocity at which his players are lifting as much as he does the weight: Different positions require different on-field demands at different speeds,

Giants' Landon Collins lost 12 pounds after kicking Oreos habit

By Paul Schwartz
New York Post
August 25, 2016

---

Landon Collins is a quitter.

"Cookies," Collins told The Post during training camp. "Oreos. Vanilla Oreos. That was my biggest weakness. A whole pack in at least an hour and a half."

Collins did not even wash the cookies down with milk. Just straight Oreos, one after another. But no longer. He says he "swore off them," and as a result, he is down to 216 pounds, after arriving as a rookie last season at around 228.

"You have to change your eating habits," Collins said. "My eating habits last year were worse than they are now."

Collins became the first Giants safety to start all 16 games as a rookie. He is noticeably quicker this summer, and safeties coach David Merritt said the reduced weight is a big reason why.

"I told him, 'If you want to become one of the elite safeties in the league you are going to have to at least get between 212 and 216,'" Merritt said. "He texted me this morning, it is funny and he said, 'Coach, I am at 216', I said, 'Great. Keep it up.'"

The result of the weight loss, plus Collins' greater knowledge of the defense, prompted Merritt to say: "So far, Landon has been a breath of fresh air versus the young man from last year."

so offensive linemen and defensive backs might work the same muscle but at various velocities to train their body for those unique stresses.

"For me, and I don't know how other people measure the success of a strength coach, but I start with the simple: When the players come in there, what's their attitude towards training?" Wellman said. "If I'm doing my job we should have guys, although they may not be excited about it, they like to be in here to train... You can look at objective markers of strength and speed and some power numbers, numbers we are able to glean from our training in here and we can come to objectively in a safe manner."

***

McAdoo and Wellman first worked together in 2001 at Michigan State. McAdoo was a special teams/offensive assistant in his first collegiate job and Wellman was in his first of three seasons with the Spartans.

With the Giants, McAdoo delegates plenty to Wellman and trusts the Ligonier, Indiana, native's extensive expertise, from Wellman's bachelor's in exercise science at Manchester (Ind.) College, to his master's degrees in both applied sport science and nutrition science from Indiana University, to his long Div. I resume.

But the most intriguing and unique element of their dynamic is how heavily involved McAdoo is in co-managing this whole process of training and limiting injury-risk with Wellman — as well as how openly McAdoo accepts accountability for its results.

"Aaron and I are attached at the hip on how we train the team," McAdoo said in a statement that speaks volumes.

Take, for example, this new pre-practice routine: Williams, the third-year running back, said "before practice there's a warm-up before the warm-up. We've got an aesthetic warm-up in the weight room with the receivers and running backs, and then we'll come out and do the dynamic warm-up outside as a team."

That wasn't Wellman's idea; it was McAdoo's. But it's an integral part of the program.

The curveball to all of this is that Wellman is also a family man with wife Shellie, son Grant, 12, and daughter Grace, 10. He makes time at home, just not in the mornings.

"My family's not up at 3:15," Wellman said, cracking a smile.

No, not at that hour. It's just the Giants' most important assistant coach, rising and going back to work.

Giants' Odell Beckham wants to be NFL's best WR -- and don't bet against him

By Steve Politi
NJ.com

September 8, 2016

Odell Beckham Jr. still watches the best players at his position with a sense of awe and respect, even if he long ago established that they should be watching him the very same way.

This is part of what makes him great, of course. He isn't satisfied with a start to his career that is, by almost any measure, one of the best for an NFL receiver in the sport's long history. He wants to be even better, and that means studying the players who are chasing greatness with him.

"I'm always (thinking), 'I want to see what he does. He's one of the best in the business,'" Beckham told a small group of reporters around his locker on Wednesday. "I want to see. I want to watch. I want to learn."

He had a chance to train with one of them — Antonio Brown of the Steelers — this offseason. He compared that to watching a top musician in concert after seeing all the hard work in the studio to make that finished product.

"I look at it the same way. I'm working out with AB and when (that work) translates over into a game, it makes sense," he said. "I love watching those guys, Larry (Fitzgerald), AB, Julio (Jones), every receiver you can think of, I watch."

But make no mistake: Entering his third season with the Giants, Beckham doesn't want to be known as one of the best receivers in the NFL. He wants to make it so that there is little debate who belongs on the top of that elite group. He wants to be the greatest.

"I mean, do you want to be the best out of these guys here?" he said to the sportswriters gathered around him, eliciting a few chuckles. "The same way you feel, it's the same as a receiver. You want to be the best. If you aim to be the best and you come up short, I think you'll be in a good position."

So far in his career, he hasn't come up short in much. He caught 96 passes for 1,450 yards and 13 touchdowns last season, improving in each statistical category from his incredible rookie campaign despite missing a game due to his suspension for the ugly Josh Norman affair. That incident is relevant to this discussion, because his inability to keep his emotions in check might be his biggest obstacle to becoming the best in the league.

It's hard not to wonder as the Giants prepare to open the season in Dallas on Sunday: How much room is there for improvement for a player who has nearly as many touchdowns (25) as career games (27)? Can Beckham find a way to do even more in Year 3?

His coach isn't sure. "The numbers he's had the last couple of years, they're going to be tough to duplicate," Ben McAdoo said. "We always talk to the offense that we can't go out there and play with two footballs."

Beckham insists, after two losing seasons in the NFL, that he'd gladly sacrifice personal stats for better results. Flipping the "6-10 number," as he called the Giants 2015 record, is the goal, and if that meant Beckham having fewer than 1,000 yards in the process?

"Shoot, if we're in the playoffs I don't care at all," he said. "We'll make up for it then."

Of course, for the Giants to have any shot at making the playoffs, they'll need Beckham at his very best again. As productive as this offense was a year ago, the unit is still loaded with questions.

Can receiver Victor Cruz regain any of his old form after nearly two years on the sidelines? Will this patchwork offensive line give Eli Manning a fighting chance? Will a pedestrian collection of running backs add balance to the attack and take pressure off the passing game?

Beckham knows, in his third season, that there's even more pressure on him to put up the big numbers.

"You've become a target," Beckham said. "I feel like if I didn't go for the same amount of yards there's always going to be somebody who has something to say. If I go for more yards, then the year after that it's going to be, 'Okay, how are you going to do better than that?'"

That's the reality that comes with chasing greatness. Beckham has put himself in that class with the top receivers in the NFL, but he still watches his rivals, from near and from afar, looking for what makes them the best in the sport.

He does that because he wants that title — the greatest receiver in the NFL — all to himself.

Ben McAdoo on his 1st message to team | Giants 4 Downs interview

By James Kratch

NJ.com

September 9, 2016

The first Giants 4 Downs interview of the season was fittingly conducted with the man coaching the team for the first time.

Ben McAdoo on National Anthem: 'I'd be disappointed if one of our guys chose not to stand'

The Ben McAdoo era will officially begin Sunday at AT&T Stadium in Arlington, Texas, when the Giants open the 2016 campaign against the Dallas Cowboys.

On Sunday, and for the rest of the season, many eyes will be on McAdoo, 39, who was promoted to the top spot in January after two seasons as the Giants' offensive coordinator. McAdoo has big shoes to fill, replacing Tom Coughlin after 12 seasons and two Super Bowl titles, and immediate pressure as he seeks to lead the Giants back to the playoffs for the first time since 2011.

Giants beat writer James Kratch went four downs with McAdoo recently to discuss one of his initial messages to the team, why he has no issues playing younger players, and more:

1ST DOWN: You have made some significant changes, like all new head coaches. But most new coaches take over teams from the outside, with a completely fresh slate and a completely new staff. You, and many of your coaches, were here last season. When you made these changes, was there ever a concern that returning players would interpret those changes as you indirectly saying that what was done under the former coach was not right, or did not work?

BM: "The most important thing I did in the first meeting was I said that as a staff, we went back and looked at the past couple years. The first thing we wanted to know about everything we did was, 'Was it working?' Not if it was a good idea, not if it was a bad idea, it was, was it working? That's all what we wanted to know. If it was working, we kept on keeping on. If it wasn't working, we needed to change it. If it was just functional, functional is not good enough to get to where we want to go. So we had to tweak it to make a difference to make a change.

"I told the players that I was a part of what has happened the last couple of years. And I believed in what we were doing. But we have to find a way to improve."

2ND DOWN: You started your coaching career at the high school level (Homer-Center in 1996-97, Indiana Area in 1998-99 when he was an undergraduate student at Indiana University of Pennsylvania). How did coaching in high school help prepare you for this level and to hold this job?

BM: "Well first, I guess you could say it got me comfortable with being around teaching players my own age. Some of the guys (at Homer-Center, his alma mater) were on the team when I was on the team. I had to set and establish boundaries early. I could still interact with them, because we were in a similar age group, but I established boundaries.

"I found a way to get them to respect those boundaries, by trial and error. It wasn't easy at first, but it was something that was important to me. I've never been much older than the guys I've coached, so that's natural for me. I've always been able to form a bond with players that I've coached because of my age, but setting those boundaries is important.

"It also helped me, because I was kind of a hot head as a young coach. When you deal with a team, you deal with players that have all kinds of different things going on in their lives. You may not understand at the time why they are reacting they way they are reacting, why they are taking coaching the way they are taking coaching. You figure out a way to treat them all, and be consistent with the way you treat them all, but treat them all different to get the best out of them."

3RD DOWN: You said earlier this summer that you will not be afraid to play young players if they are ready. Why are you confident in playing young players, and do you think teams in this league are too hesitant to play young players?

BM: "I'm not worried about the rest of the league. But I just know the way I was trained in this business was in Green Bay. It seemed like we always had the youngest team, other than the quarterback and the long snapper. I can certainly see that happening here. And I'm absolutely fine with it, because I'm confident that we can teach in this new collective bargaining agreement to get the results we're looking for, and have success with it. We're going to spend time teaching the fundamentals and situational football, and tailoring it to the players out there."

4TH DOWN: At your introductory press conference, you called the New York/New Jersey area "the football capital of the world in your mind?

BM: "I think the passion of the fans in north Jersey and New York, I think it's special. I think it's important to them. The class, and the sheer number of people that are packed into this area and the number of Giants fans, it's amazing to me."

EXTRA POINT: Obviously you have communicated with Tom Coughlin. But are there any other New York/New Jersey coaches or managers you have spoken to since you got the job?

BM: "I've spoken to a few, but I don't want to give out any names. They've all been great; every one has been supportive. It's somewhat of a fraternity."

On Ben McAdoo's Journey to the Top, False Starts and Tenacity

By Bill Pennington
New York Times
September 10, 2016

In 2000, at 22 years old, Ben McAdoo had no plans to become a coach, not even in midget football, let alone in the N.F.L. His career game plan included law school. He had not been in a football uniform since high school.

The son and grandson of western Pennsylvania coal miners, McAdoo willingly saw a desk job in his future.

Sixteen years later, McAdoo will debut as the 17th coach of the Giants when the team opens its season Sunday against the Dallas Cowboys. But the unlikely path to an N.F.L. head-coaching career began in the fall of 2000, when McAdoo called the daring audible of a lifetime, ditching law school and mainstream executive dreams to begin the chancy, rolling-stone existence of a football coach.

"Not the typical route to the N.F.L.," McAdoo said after a Giants practice last month. "Everything happens for a reason, I guess, but I did have to do some quick rerouting."

He also had to overcome recurrent, vexing obstacles placed in his way. Doors were closed when he sought a coaching job. When he finally got one, the football program was abandoned months after he joined it.

"There were trying moments," McAdoo said of the decision to redraw his life plan. "Again, a little different road than the rest. But not everybody gets to where they're going the same way."

The turning point, nonetheless, was from 2000 to 2003, a period when, from the outside, it might have appeared that McAdoo was spinning his wheels.

The first in his family to earn a college degree, McAdoo graduated from Indiana University of Pennsylvania summa cum laude in 2000. He had attended on an academic scholarship, commuting to classes from his parents' home six miles away in Homer City (population 1,700).

When he chose to enroll in a master's degree program at Michigan State, it meant leaving his hometown, something not often done by the locals. But throughout Homer City, McAdoo was known as a gritty, assertive self-starter. People still recalled his touchdown-producing blocks as an undersize tackle on the district championship football team at Homer-Center High School.

Too small to play football in college, McAdoo had thrown himself into his studies. He spent many of his after-school hours as an assistant coach at a local high school — football is a passion in Western Pennsylvania — but at other times, McAdoo began to see himself as an academic.

"Academics became a way for me to compete; I enjoyed it," he said last month.

And McAdoo had not abandoned sports altogether. Pursuing his master's was part of a grander plan that included applying to law school. He then intended to parlay his various degrees to get a top administrative job in intercollegiate athletics.

But something unexpected occurred in his first few weeks at Michigan State. When the football season commenced, McAdoo felt his life plan unravel.

"I was miserable," McAdoo said.

McAdoo had been willing to plot a course without football, and he had taken every step to leave the sideline behind.

"But as a grad student, I had a job in the Michigan State athletic department that put me on the field on football game days, and I loved the juice of the environment," McAdoo said. "I missed the locker room. I missed the players. I had thought just being around games and working in an athletic setting would satisfy my thirst. It did not.

"I didn't realize what I really wanted to do — be a coach — until I stopped doing it."

His wife, Toni, who has known McAdoo since grade school, recalled last week the day when he sat her down with the news that he was abruptly diverting the course of his career.

"I had no idea what I was getting into, I just knew that he would be happy getting back to what he loved to do," said Toni McAdoo, who was his girlfriend at the time. "I figured the worst thing that would have happened is that we would both go back home and get teaching jobs."

McAdoo did not consult his family in Pennsylvania. "I kind of took the bull by the horns," he said. "I listened to my gut."

But he immediately stumbled over several hurdles. His first attempt to get a coaching job was a bust. He wanted to help out a Michigan high school team, as he had in Pennsylvania. But the teaching certificate he had earned, a requirement to coach in high school, was limited to his home state.

"I couldn't get anyone to touch me," McAdoo said.

McAdoo had been hired as an intern in the Michigan State athletic marketing and promotions department, so he next sought advice from his boss, Paul Schager.

"I've never had an intern — before or since — who came into my office and said they wanted to be a coach," said Schager, who is now Michigan State's executive associate athletic director. "Ben's the only one, and it came out of nowhere. He was not a big talker. But he was highly organized, determined and skilled."

Schager, who is also a Western Pennsylvania product, sent McAdoo to the athletic offices, suggesting that over-worked football coaches always needed help.

That may have been true, but McAdoo initially had trouble getting a coach's ear. One day, McAdoo called each Michigan State coach. The next day, he sent each one an email. After that, he sent them each a fax.

Eventually, another Western Pennsylvania native, Sal Sunseri, then the Michigan State linebackers and special-teams coach and now a linebackers coach for the Oakland Raiders, told McAdoo that he could assume some of the thankless, nonpaying, quasi-clerical duties in the football program.

McAdoo took on those tasks and more, seeming to never leave the athletic building. Soon, McAdoo's computer acumen stood out, and the practice plans and drawings he prepared for Sunseri were exemplary.

"Better than anything we had ever had," Sunseri said.

It was still mostly grunt work, and McAdoo never set foot on the practice field. But he was happy, nonetheless.

"When you are doing the type of work that no one else in the building wants to do and you are thoroughly enjoying it, you realize you made the right decision," he said.

He earned his master's degree in kinesiology in just nine months. Toni graduated from Indiana University of Pennsylvania in 2001 and joined him in central Michigan. His responsibilities in the football office increased until he was working directly under the head coach, Bobby Williams. He was moving up the ladder, but he still was not a coach. And he needed a paying job.

So he and Toni started mailing letters to universities and colleges around the country.

"I remember stuffing letters that went to every college we had an address for," she said. "We were asking for internships, asking for anything."

Just before the 2002 football season, McAdoo saw an ad on the internet seeking an offensive line and tight ends coach at Fairfield University in Connecticut, which played in the lower tier of Division I. The Fairfield head coach, Joe Bernard, interviewed McAdoo and was impressed with his tactical football knowledge.

It was far from big-time football, but it was a paid coaching position, and when McAdoo got the job, it appeared to be a career milestone.

Bernard, now the offensive coordinator at the University of Albany, recalled that the Fairfield football offices were a collection of cubicles with walls so high it was impossible to look to the other side. But when Bernard arrived for work each day at about 5 or 6 a.m., he did not need to physically see McAdoo at his desk. He just began talking, and McAdoo would answer him. It was the same when Bernard bid McAdoo farewell at midnight.

"I had the chance to really wrap my hands around coaching — to help athletes get better," McAdoo said. "No football scholarships, but bright, hard-working kids."

Fairfield had a 5-6 record in 2002, after which Bernard left for another job. McAdoo was named the assistant head coach. Now 25 years old, he took over the recruiting effort and shepherded Fairfield toward its next season.

"I had a lot of responsibility, and I enjoyed that," McAdoo said. "I did that until they kicked me out the door."

In February 2003, Fairfield eliminated the football program, citing financial pressures. The McAdoos needed another job again.

"It was a little scary," Toni McAdoo said.

Her husband, if anything, was emboldened. In his mind, he had joined the coaching fraternity. As proof, he started to contact the network of coaches he now knew. It led to an opening at the University of Pittsburgh, albeit as another largely unseen office assistant. Another grunt job.

"I was off the field — filming practice from the railroad tracks in the end zone," McAdoo said with a laugh last month.

Was he not shaken to be starting over again?

"I was living the dream," McAdoo answered evenly. "I was right where I could learn so much."

It was the first of six coaching jobs in the next four years, from Pittsburgh to Akron to New Orleans to two jobs in Northern California and then to Green Bay, Wis.

In 2006, during the off-season from McAdoo's job as tight ends coach with the Green Bay Packers, he and Toni were married. Eight years later, he came to the Giants as a surprise choice to take over the team's offensive coordinator duties. In January, although he had never been a head coach at any level of football, McAdoo was named the successor of the longtime Giants coach Tom Coughlin.

"It hasn't always been easy, but I've never doubted any of these decisions to go here or to go there," Toni McAdoo said last week. "Ben's complete confidence in what he was doing had a lot to do with that. I don't know where he gets it, but he's always been like that."

Standing inside the Giants' training complex last month, McAdoo was asked if he had ever pondered how easily one misstep or ill-timed setback might have permanently derailed the unforeseen, uncharted path to his current job.

"You could look at it that way," said McAdoo, who likes to keep his words to a minimum. "I don't look in the rear mirror much."

At 39 years old, he is the second-youngest head coach in the N.F.L. and the face of one of the league's most storied franchises.

So the question was posed: Did he think his ascent to the upper echelon of his chosen profession actually happened pretty quickly?

"No," he replied. "It took too long."

How Ben McAdoo earned Giants' respect by sticking to his roots

By Steve Serby
New York Post
September 11, 2016

No one could have envisioned Bill Parcells growing into a Hall of Fame head coach when he made his debut with a 16-6 loss to the Rams on Sept. 4, 1983, at Giants Stadium. He said afterward: "I'm embarrassed about the performance."

No one could have predicted Tom Coughlin would be a two-time Super Bowl champion head coach when he made his Giants debut with a 31-17 loss to the Eagles on Sept. 12, 2004, in Philadelphia and said afterward: "It's real disappointing. It's like getting kicked in the stomach."

And so no one has any inkling how this Ben McAdoo era, which begins Sunday against the Cowboys, will unfold, because some smart football people were certain Bill Arnsparger and Ray Handley could stand in the broiling fire of the New York arena and be defiant, unblinking generals.

The real bullets start flying Sunday at and around McAdoo at 4:25 p.m., Jerry Jones exhorting his team from his suite, the Dallas Cowboys cheerleaders strutting their world-class stuff, rookie Dak Prescott replacing Tony Romo at quarterback.

Giants players, who have listened to McAdoo command the room and care for them while maintaining an unmistakable edge, are convinced he is the right man for the job — the same job that belonged to Coughlin for 12 years.

Eli Manning was a rookie backup to Kurt Warner the day Coughlin made his debut, and it is McAdoo's good fortune that Manning is the established franchise quarterback and leader of the McAdoo movement at a time when John Mara, Steve Tisch and Jerry Reese were seeking regime change.

"It's not too big for him," Manning told The Post of his new coach. "He's come in, and taken over. He's been very organized. He has a plan, he's sticking with it, and demands and gets the attention of the people that we're gonna play a certain way and do things a certain way." Sound, smart and tough, and committed to discipline and poise. It's plastered on the players' shirts. "There's just a temperament about him that understands how to talk to the players, how to make us react, how to keep our attention, whether it's in the meeting room or out on the field," Victor Cruz said.

McAdoo is 39, young enough to be Coughlin's son. While Coughlin was a beloved legend at the end, McAdoo is flexible enough for the millennials he is imploring to help him place a fifth Lombardi Trophy in the glass case of the lobby of the training center. And he is fearless. He will coach to win.

"I think he brings a lot of energy, and as players, he's easy to play for," Weston Richburg said. "He's the same guy every day, and he makes it fun, he makes it easy to go out there and really give everything you have." Asked how McAdoo makes it fun, Richburg said, "He asks for input from guys, like on what we're doing, and what we like going into games and stuff. It really feels like a real team environment, which is good."

The Giants have given their rookie coach every chance to succeed with a $200 million free-agent renovation of the league's worst defense, the retention of defensive coordinator Steve Spagnuolo and special teams coach Tom Quinn and the drafting of precocious receiver Sterling Shepard — not to mention the long-awaited return of Cruz after 700 days away, to ease the burden on Odell Beckham Jr.

"You wouldn't know that this is his first head coaching job," Shepard said. "He's always in everybody's ear. He's not focused on one side of the ball all the time. He's an offensive coach but he's also in the defensive players' ears, and in our ears as well. I mean, he's helping me out all the time, I feel like."

McAdoo brings his blue-collar work ethic from Homer, Pa. "He's a militant about his work," Rashad Jennings said. "He understands the architect of the team ... and everybody is responding to his voice."

What is it about his voice that makes guys respond? "Respect," Jennings said. "He earns it from everybody." He demands a team that earns it from everybody.

"He's a [Pennsylvania] guy like myself," Justin Pugh said. "He's a tough-nosed guy as well, I think it runs off on everybody on the team."

From Homer Center High School, to Sanso's Italian Deli Pizzeria, McAdoo's hometown was buzzing with pride every day this week. There are five TVs inside Sanso's, and Giants-Cowboys will be on.

"He's a no-nonsense guy," longtime Sanso's owner For-Forrest Harris said. "He's gonna do a good job for you guys up there. We're having a little conflict over the Steelers, they're playing the Steelers Dec. 4. Everybody's talking about that already. They're talking about getting buses and going down. ... It's gonna be an exciting time for us."

It hasn't been an exciting time these past four years for Giants fans as hungry for the playoffs as their 2016 team is.

"Everybody has a lot to prove," Jennings said. "From top to bottom."

McAdoo you believe?

For Victor Cruz, ending could not have been more perfect

By Bob Glauber
Newsday
September 12, 2016

The confluence of events and the crescendo of feelings could not have been more breathtakingly dramatic or more soul-stirringly emotional for Victor Cruz.

Nearly two years removed from a horrific knee injury that threatened his career, and a year after an aborted comeback from a calf injury that also required surgery, the 29-year-old receiver on Sunday played his first regular-season game against a divisional opponent that was punctuated by deeply personal memories of one of America's worst tragedies.

The ending could not have been more perfect for him: Cruz made the game-winning catch in the Giants' 20-19 win over the Cowboys, giving his team its first opening day win since 2010 and giving himself the chance to do his famed salsa touchdown dance for the first time since early in the 2014 season.

"Just elated, just in that moment," Cruz said of his emotions during the dance. "Couldn't even describe what was going through my body, to obviously do the dance and just celebrate with my teammates."

It was the culmination of a grueling rehabilitation process that included some major setbacks but ultimately wound up with a successful return.

Yet there was a more personal connection to this day, the 15th anniversary of the 9/11 attacks. Cruz was a sophomore at Paterson (N.J.) Catholic High School on 9/11 and his father, a former Paterson firefighter, spent nearly a week helping out at Ground Zero.

He honored the memory of his father and the other first responders who helped on that terrible day and in the aftermath, wearing pregame cleats with firefighter designs and then wearing in-game cleats with U.S.A. on them — for which he likely will be fined by the NFL because of the league's strict uniform policy.

"I mean, especially my dad being a fireman for over 30 years and being one of the firemen that were at Ground Zero out there at that time, it's always a heavy-hearted day," Cruz said of his father, Mike Walker. "You think about that moment where you were on that day, thinking about the emotions that went through your body that day. You relived those moments. It's one of those days you remember forever and one of those days now that you want to honor those first responders and those firemen and those police officers that were there and just cherish the moment."

Cruz's father took his own life nine years ago, reportedly depressed because of persistent difficulty dealing with injuries from a car accident. He is never far from Victor's thoughts.

"He went down there the next day and he spent five or six days there," Cruz said. "He went back each and every day, helping and being there for whoever needed it. They obviously needed all the help they can get. He was one of those guys in the trenches."

Cruz could not have been more touched to make his comeback and make his mark on this day. He finished with four receptions, the first of them a sideline catch, after which he pumped his fist in the air when taken out of bounds by two Cowboys defenders.

"That was just excitement," he said. "My energy level was so high. That was my first catch, and I was like, 'I'm not going to go down. I'm not letting it stop me.' I just wanted that energy to be reciprocated by our team."

But his final catch was his most dramatic. With the Giants trailing 19-13 in the fourth quarter, Cruz wound up going over the middle and caught a 3-yard pass in the end zone from Eli Manning with 6:13 remaining.

"I was supposed to go five yards and kind of sit in that specific area, but it got kind of cloudy, and I saw the middle of the field pop open," Cruz said. "So I made a football play, got there and Eli and I were on the same page and he hit me in stride."

Manning said Cruz freelanced on the route and actually might run afoul of his coaches in the grading process.

"He might actually get a minus on the route, because technically, he was not supposed to do what he did," Manning said. "But we'll worry about that later. It's a minus good job, good touchdown. Sometimes you get those in football."

Once he made the catch, Cruz unleashed his emotions.

"He was screaming," rookie receiver Sterling Shepard said. "Then he turned around and I smacked him on his helmet."

Said Odell Beckham Jr.: "I just wanted to sit there, cross my legs, have a bag of popcorn and just watch him salsa. It's been a long time coming. It feels great for me, so I can only imagine what it feels like for him."

It was a wonderful moment for him. Seven hundred days after he last played a football game, Cruz made a dramatic return against a dramatic backdrop.

"Just the way my life has unfolded here, I don't even know what kind of ending it's going to have," he said. "I don't want it to end. I just want it to continue, continue to keep my faith strong in God and continue to push forward."

Giants' Jersey guy Jonathan Casillas savoring 'storybook' late career surge

By James Kratch

NJ.com

September 15, 2016

John Quinn was headed home, his first day as New Brunswick High's head football coach complete, when he received a call from police. One of his players had been in a car accident.

Quinn hurried to the scene, and found one of his sophomores lying on Livingston Avenue. The kid hit a car while riding his bicycle, the collision sending him through the windshield. Quinn followed the player and his mother to the hospital.

"He was pretty banged up, he had a lot of cuts," Quinn, now the athletic director at Plainfield High, recalled. "But no broken bones."

Take a few days, Quinn told him. Give us a call when you're feeling better. The mom agreed, and Quinn went home.

Quinn arrived at the field at 6:40 a.m. the next day. He expected to be the first person there, because the head coach should be the first one there.

But he wasn't first. The kid Quinn sat with at the hospital a few hours earlier was, sitting on his bike, waiting for the gate to be unlocked.

"I say, 'Hey, how are you feeling?' He goes, 'I feel good,'" Quinn said.

"And I go, 'What are you doing up here? Are you going to the trainer for treatment?' And he says, 'No coach. I'm ready to practice.' And I knew right that day, that this kid is a keeper."

The kid's name was Jonathan Casillas. In hindsight, those sore ribs he suffered in the preseason never had a chance to keep Casillas out of the Giants' season opener against the Cowboys.

Quinn has told that story for years. First to college recruiters, now to a reporter. It may sound too good to be true, but Quinn vows it is, and Casillas has told the story before himself.

But the latest chapter to Casillas' story? No one saw this coming. Quinn certainly had no idea the tough kid he encountered his first day on the job in 2002 would be the Giants' starting weakside linebacker and captain 14 years later, preparing for Sunday's home opener against the Saints, the team that gave him his first professional shot.

But here we are.

"No one could write a better story," Casillas said earlier this week, a smile across his face as he stood by his locker.

'I SHOULD HAVE LISTENED TO YOU'

When Casillas signed with the Giants in 2015, a 10-year journey home ended.

Casillas grew up in Jersey City before moving to New Brunswick for high school. He started playing football as a freshman. By the end of his sophomore season, he was a starting linebacker. By his senior year, he was a recruit with multiple scholarship offers.

But there was a notable omission.

"Greg Schiano said, 'John, he's the one kid out of New Jersey I wish I had a second shot at. I should have listened to you,'" Quinn said. But Schiano, then the Rutgers coach, thought Casillas was a "tweener," too small to be a linebacker, but not quite a safety.

Quinn told Schiano that Casillas could be a linebacker once he had a year or two in a college weight room, but Schiano was never convinced. So Casillas was off to Wisconsin. By the end of his freshman season, he was a Badger folk hero.

Wisconsin trailed rival Minnesota, 34-31, with under a minute to go when Casillas blocked a punt. The kick was recovered by a teammate in the end zone, lifting Wisconsin to an improbable victory.

Casillas started 36 games at Wisconsin. He was projected as a mid-round NFL Draft pick. But a knee injury at the end of his senior season hindered his pre-draft process. He went undrafted, and signed with New Orleans.

He fought his way onto the roster that summer, getting two starts as a rookie. He also helped the Saints win Super Bowl XLIV, recovering New Orleans' surprise onside kick to open the second half.

Casillas was set to start in 2010, but he suffered a season-ending injury in the preseason. He would play two more years in New Orleans, starting an additional six games. But Casillas, like many other NFL players, became pigeonholed.

The world decided he was a standout special teams player, and a backup linebacker best suited for nickel packages. Casillas embraced the roles he was given, but he believed he could do more.

"It did bother me. And then you hit free agency, and you're trying to lobby for yourself, and they're like, 'Oh, you only played 19 percent of the defensive plays,'" Casillas said. "You're a prime time special teams player, cool, but you only played 19 percent of the defensive plays. It's tough. But you've got to be ready, and you've got to be available."

Casillas signed with Tampa Bay as a free agent in 2013. Schiano was the Buccaneers' coach, and did not want Casillas to get away a second time.

Schiano was fired at the end of that season. Casillas started seven games in Tampa, but left a few months after Schiano, traded to the Patriots during the 2014 season. Three more starts, and a second Super Bowl ring, awaited in New England.

Then it was time to come home.

'IT'S COMING TO ME RIGHT NOW'

If you see Casillas, there's a good chance he will be wearing a hat. It might be a New York Rangers cap, or maybe an Islanders cap. Or a Devils cap, a Mets cap, a Yankees cap.

Casillas wears the hats to support the local teams. They also speak to the joy he has being home in New Jersey, close to loved ones and the communities he grew up in, playing for the local club. His dad, Jersey City playground hoops legend Flash Gordon, is at almost every game. His 5-year-old daughter, Jade, is at many as well.

"I'm a very family-oriented person, and my family is around now," he said. "It's not easy when you don't have anyone around, besides people that come to see you every now and again. But now, I have everybody here. Having that support system here is always good."

The Giants signed Casillas to improve their special teams, and provide depth at linebacker. He did that, overcoming a neck injury in the preseason to start seven games last year.

But this offseason, it clicked. Casillas returned to his natural position at weakside linebacker, and spent much of the spring with the first-team defense as J.T. Thomas battled a hamstring injury.

Casillas grabbed a stranglehold on the job once training camp began. Casillas was one of the Giants' best players in the preseason. And with his mild rib injury behind him, he continued his star turn in Sunday's 20-19 win over the Cowboys, leading the team with 10 tackles and faring well in pass coverage. He has become the Giants' only three-down linebacker - something few anticipated.

"It's been a good few months. I've been working hard, trying to do all the right things, live my life the right way. It's coming to me right now," Casillas said. "I've been blessed with the opportunity to be a captain of my hometown team. Who can say that?"

"But I've got to continue to get better. There's a lot of mistakes I made this past weekend. I've got to continue to improve on and upgrade myself, so I can help this defense continue to rise."

LATE BLOOMER

Why now?

It's a question many have asked. Casillas always been fast. Casillas is had the Middlesex County 100-meter record until earlier this spring, when New Brunswick's Maurice Ffrench broke it, and he dusted former NFL running back Knowshon Moreno as a senior in a state sectional race, running a 10.77 second first-place finish to Moreno's second-place 11.23.

But for whatever reason, that speed was mostly utilized for special teams and sub package play. Until now. Casillas was the best linebacker on the field against the Cowboys, and he's been that player since August. He is as indispensable at this point as a Olivier Vernon, or any other defensive standout.

"He's active, he's fast, he can run. He's, in a lot of ways, what you're looking for in today's linebacker when you're playing a game in space," Saints coach Sean Payton said.

"He had very good makeup. I think he's someone that is well thought of here, in this building. ... It doesn't surprise me at all. There's a growth that takes place with players."

Giants coach Ben McAdoo said the team is fortunate they signed Casillas as a free agent two offseasons ago. Casillas will tell you he is fortunate to be where he is. He only needs to see Thomas, who went on season-ending injured reserve earlier this week with torn ligaments in his knee, to be reminded of that.

"I don't take anything for granted," Casillas said. "I'm getting a little older in my career. When you're younger, you think you can play 10 years. Then you get to year No. 8, and 10 years is there. Nothing is promised. Anything can happen. That's what the NFL is."

But for now, Casillas is going to enjoy this. Soak it all in.

He's home, he's playing, he's a captain, he's a Giant.

"He's a tremendous source of pride for me and all the guys that coached with me," Quinn said. "I couldn't be more proud of any kid that I've ever coached."

"Going from an undrafted free agent to a two-time Super Bowl winner, to now the captain of one of the NFL's flagship franchises, in his home state, is nothing but storybook."

Giants' surprise captain on 'Shut the f—k up' LT story, 'addictive' Super Bowl

By Steve Serby

NY Post

September 17, 2016

Giants linebacker and defensive captain Jonathan Casillas tackled some Q&A with Post columnist Steve Serby.

Q: What is your definition of a captain?

A: A leader, a motivator, a path-setter. A guy that goes out there and leads by example. No matter what he says, he's doing what he has to do, and people can look for him, 'cause he's gonna be right in the right spot at the right time. He's very reliable, and he sets the tone, he sets the standards.

Q: If you could go back in history and pick the brain of any football player or coach in history, who would it be?

A: Lawrence Taylor. ... We've heard so much about this guy, they've got specials on him here and there. If I speak to him, as a New York Giant captain, what is Lawrence Taylor gonna say to me, when I start picking his brain?

Q: What would you want to ask him?

A: I would ask him how was it being him in New York? Being Lawrence Taylor in New York. From the off-field to the on-field. I got coached by Bill [Belichick, with the Patriots in 2014]. Bill Belichick was [Taylor's] linebacker coach when he was here. I tried to get something from Bill, Bill didn't give me nothing. I said, "Bill, you got a story for me please?" He didn't tell me nothing (smile). Jessie [Armstead] told me something though. ... Jessie said when he was a rookie, they gave him the starting nod at Mike linebacker. Jessie said he was in the huddle like, "All right, everybody shut the f— up and listen to me." So everybody in the huddle's talking, and LT was probably one of the guys talking. And [Armstead] said, LT looked at him like (laugh), he said, "You shut your damn mouth when you're in my huddle. You don't talk to me like that. I put these fans here. I built this stadium." Jessie said, the next call comes back, they were waiting for the call, and Jessie did not say anything to the defense.

Q: What is the difference in motivational styles of Tom Coughlin and Ben McAdoo?

A: I feel like Tom was up and down. Tom was fiery, then he was cool. He was hot, he was cold. It was kind of like you don't really know what you're gonna get on a given day (chuckle). He'd come in, he might be monotone, then all of a sudden you come out at practice, he's jumping around like, "Let's go guys!" McAdoo's always the same way — he's fiery all the time.

Q: Have you ever seen anything like Odell Beckham Jr?

A: No. The kid's amazing. I brought my daughter to his house to watch the LSU-Wisconsin game. She's calling him his whole name: (high-pitched voice) "Odell Beckham, hey Odell Beckham, how you doing?" She's staring at him the whole time (smile), I'm like, "You're embarrassing me, stop staring at him." It wasn't really that, it was more or less like that's the guy that she sees on TV. He's a rock star on this level. That's off the field. But on the field, nobody works harder than him.

Q: Who are linebackers now you like to watch?

A: When I first got into the league, I had film on Jon Beason and Patrick Willis. Now, I watch Lavonte David, Thomas Davis, NaVorro Bowman, and of course [Luke] Kuechly.

Q: What drives you?

A: At first, when I was younger, it was to get a scholarship ... to let my mom not pay for my education. And then, when I got to college, it was to be good enough to get to the NFL. And then when I get to the NFL, I won my first Super Bowl as a [Saints] rookie, and that spoiled me. And now, it's the quest for the rings. I'm always trying to get another ring. I play like I want to go to the Super Bowl. I practice like I want to go to the Super Bowl. I talk like I want to go to the Super Bowl, because I've been to the Super Bowl, and there's nothing better in this profession than going to the Super Bowl and winning it. And, I want to get rings for other guys. I want to get Eli [Manning] his third, I want to get Zak [DeOssie] his third. I want to have DRC [Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie] actually win one — he's been to two, he's lost both of 'em.

Q: You won your second Super Bowl with the Patriots. Is it addictive?

A: It is very addictive. My first time around, I didn't know any better, I'm just kind of soaking everything in. The second time around, I realized the first time I didn't have any pictures with the trophy. The second time I got a lot of pictures with the trophy (laugh).

Q: In the Super Bowl XLIV win over the Colts, did you recover the onside kick at the start of the second half for the Saints or was it Chris Reis?

A: I say it's both of us, because when I went in there, I got the ball. But I could not get up because the referee was sitting on top of me. And the referee was like, "White ball, white ball, white ball," so I let the ball go, and Chris Reis got up with it.

Q: What did you thinking when the Seahawks didn't give Marshawn Lynch the ball at the 1-yard line late in Super Bowl XLIX?

A: (Chuckle). Not a good call by them. Not a good call by them.

Q: In 25 words or less, describe Olivier Vernon.

A: OV is a quiet beast.

Q: Jason Pierre-Paul.

A: Freak of nature.

Q: Johnathan Hankins.

A: He's a better player than he was last year, and he was good last year.

Q: Damon "Snacks" Harrison.

A: He's the immovable object.

Q: Defensive coordinator Steve Spagnuolo.

A: Spagnuolo is a very passionate, caring, smart, well-intentioned human being.

Q: Describe your draft-day experience in 2009.

A: I call it the best, worst, longest day of my life. ... We were at my mom's house in Somerset, and I got everybody there, man. At one point, late in the fifth [round], before the sixth, my aunt's asking me, "Is your phone on?" I'm like, "Yes, my phone's on!" So at one point I went upstairs, I'm like, what the hell? Is this really happening to me? Am I good enough to play? My mom came up there, and I cried a little bit. I'm not a crier, but it was a very emotional thing for me. She always says what I need to hear. It was something along the lines like, "Don't worry, it'll happen. It'll come soon. Don't worry about those guys that passed up on you. Whenever you get your opportunity I know you're gonna get the best of it. But come back downstairs when you get a chance."

Q: You signed as an undrafted free agent with the Saints.

A: I told my family like, "Look, I'm not going down there to make any friends, I'm going down there to take somebody's job."

Q: Did that fuel your fire?

A: (Reveals tattoo on right hand) 4-26-09, that's draft day, on my hand, you see it?

Q: When did you get that?

A: Like two days, three days later. Before I had my neck tattoos, my only visible tattoo when I had sleeves on. So I could see it every day, for motivation. I knew that I would have to go above and beyond to go ahead and make this team.

Q: Your 5-year-old daughter Jade drives you now.

A: She is amazing. She's so smart, and funny. But she's caring. She sees a little kid or baby, she goes (in high-pitched voice), "Oh look at the baby! Can I hold the baby?" She's always been like that. She has a huge heart at such a young age.

Q: Describe your mom.

A: Born in Puerto Rico, moved here very, very, very young, maybe 1 or 2 years old. She was a nurse. When we were growing up, we didn't have too much. At one point, she had three kids, welfare, public transportation, I remember taking buses and stuff. We didn't know any better though. She was taking [Routes] 1 and 9 to work from Jersey City to New Brunswick, instead of taking the Turnpike because she couldn't afford the toll. And I didn't know that until I got older. That's a straight shot, that's like 45 minutes. On 1 and 9? That's like an hour-and-a-half at least.

Q: Who was your boyhood idol?

A: Allen Iverson was everything to me. He was like us — when I say us, he was a young, black kid, with the braids, and how he dressed. It was like he was reachable, 'cause he kind of looked like us. He wasn't that big, and he played like the biggest guy on the court.

Q: Who are athletes in other sports you admire?

A: LeBron [James] was the best player on the planet at 17 years old (chuckle). I admire him because he's like a New York team — one year you're doing hot, everybody loves you, got your haters still. ... And then when you're not doing so well, when you're losing championships, when you're not making the playoffs, everybody turns their back on you. They talk crap about you, they put you in a category and they compare you to other people and other teams, and only thing he's doing is just fight, fight, fight, and grind and grind and grind and be the best player he can be and improve every year, and now he's got another one. He did it for his city. I'm trying to do it for my city, my state, and I'm trying to follow in this man's footsteps and come home and win a championship.

Q: Anybody else?

A: I'm a huge [Floyd] Mayweather fan. I grew up watching boxing, Arturo Gatti's from Jersey City, Roy Jones is my favorite boxer of all time. [Mayweather] makes everyone rich that fights him. He's not only set the standard, he's broken anything that any boxer's ever done before him, he's broken that mold. Not only is he a great fighter, he's a great promoter. And he plays the villain role the best I've ever seen. I just like during a fight how he breaks his guy down and at the end of the fight, the guy really doesn't have a chance. Stops fighting, stops throwing punches, and then like, "Oh it's a boring fight." Yeah, because Mayweather made it that way. And as a defense, that's what you want to do. You want to make the team that you're playing a boring team. You want to make it a boring game.

Q: Four dinner guests?

A: Muhammad Ali, Obama, Martin Luther King, [Michael] Jordan.

Q: Favorite movie?

A: "Paid in Full."

Q: Favorite actor.

A: Denzel [Washington].

Q: Favorite actress?

A: Scarlett Johansson.

Q: Favorite meal?

A: Family Thanksgiving food.

DRC on Beckham's demeanor and being the coolest guy on the field

By Steve Serby
NY Post
October 9, 2016

Giants defensive back Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie tackled some Q&A with Post columnist Steve Serby.

Q: You've been a big brother/mentor to Odell Beckham Jr. What have you been telling him?

A: When a man changes his mind, he can change his ways. I tell him, "Don't feed into it, don't be like, 'Ah they're all after me,' when something goes off and then you get a penalty or something, and then you really feel like that. You just gotta play your game. The best way you can defend all that off is just go out there and just do your job. Don't lose your flashiness, don't do that, 'cause that's you, you're Odell. Just know when to use it. You catch a ball out of bounds for 10 yards, don't go back into the person's face and taunt him. ... Now if you get a touchdown, do your thing, I'm gonna be right there with you to do it. The spots, you have to pick 'em. Like after every catch, it doesn't always require something that you have to do."

Q: He feels like the officials are out to get him.

A: I told him just looking from outside in, "I could feel how you would say that. That's all you see, that's all that's being talked about, so in your mind, you think it's that big, but whenever you just decide to zone back in and play ball, man, you will see it's not really like that."

Q: As a defensive back, the blueprint now is to rough him up and get in his head. So how does he combat that?

A: In that case, you just fight fire with fire. You never back down 'cause that's not in him. I'm not saying, somebody gets out there and they hit you late, just look at 'em and say, "OK, clap your hands." You ain't gotta go towards him, you ain't gotta touch him. Let him know, "OK, I see what kind of game this is," and then line back up and play ball. From whistle to whistle.

Q: He said on radio he wasn't having fun.

A: I don't think he meant that. When you get a young guy like that, I think he mean that he's frustrated that he ain't getting the catches or the touchdowns or the yards that he thinks he should be at this point. It's not fun when you're not being able to do what you're capable of doing. That's never fun.

Q: So what do you think his mindset is right now?

A: I think his mindset is really: just ball. You got a lot of people on your team showing you that they care, and they're willing to stick by your side through anything, man, I think it's gonna hone in. In the locker room, everybody goes up to him and it's still the same. It ain't no, "Odell's coming around, guys."

Q: Can he control himself?

A: Oh yeah, definitely, definitely. Does he wear his emotions on his sleeve? Is he a passionate guy? Definitely. But as far as just going haywire and just nuts? Nah. Anytime you're losing, and you're not a factor, yeah it bothers you. That's any man, that's any competitor. People show it different kind of ways. But if you look at it, he's always been passionate like that. He's a fiery guy.

Q: But he's gotta practice self-control.

A: You gotta have that. You gotta pick your spots knowing when to pump up the crowd, or when to get into your Beast Mode. But that just comes along with maturity. He's still young now, he's still young. He's gonna get it.

Q: He's gotta get it now.

A: That comes along with teammates. Everybody has to come together and support him, be for him and just keep telling him, "Continue to do you, man, but we're gonna do this thing together," and just keep it that way.

Q: So you don't think Giants fans have to worry about his behavior.

A: No no no ... 'cause I know him as a guy. Giants fans can only go off of what they've seen so far on the television. But they don't know him personally. See, I know him personally, and I know that's not his character, I know he's not that kind of guy to just ... He's not built like that.

Q: You don't see him as a distraction.

A: I just see it as a competitor not being allowed to display his ability, and it's frustrating him. What he has to learn how to do is channel that energy somewhere else. If you can't get the big catch, make it up on a block for a run. I don't look at it as, "Oh s--t, we gotta worry about Odell, he's going haywire." Heck no. I don't care what nobody says — you want 13 on that field.

Q: What do you think of Janoris Jenkins?

A: You got these corners out here that just talk about it, he don't say nothing, man, Jackrabbit just goes play. And he plays 100 miles an hour. There'll be times you think he's beat, he comes through in that last minute, he's always fighting to get the ball out. He's just that elite competitor that you look for in a guy.

Q: Eli Apple?

A: He's a physical corner, he comes up, tackles well. You don't see him back down from nobody no matter who comes out there, he'll guard anybody.

Q: Olivier Vernon?

A: Quietest man I've seen in my life. Makes a lot of noise on the field, but man, personality wise, I don't think I heard him speak try. But he's a force to be reckoned with, man. I think he draws a holding penalty every game, he comes off that edge so fast. He's strong, he's dominant, so he's definitely a good pickup.

Q: Damon Harrison?

A: I think he's like the true voice behind the real leaders. He's one of the guys that if things ain't going well, he's gonna let you know. He holds guys accountable. He'll come to you as a man and tell you, "Hey, I need this that and that." Because we know when Snacks is out there on that field, he's going 110 percent, and he's fighting.

Q: Sterling Shepard?

A: As a young guy, he already has that mindset and ability to be a big-play guy, and he does the dirty work too, he's catching balls across the middle, anywhere, and he goes up and gets the ball like he's 6-6. That amazes me, too. Some mindsets, it's unknown, you don't really know what to expect from the NFL, but it's like he's running in, kicking the door down and letting people know, "I'm here!"

Q: Victor Cruz's comeback?

A: He don't surprise me, I know him. I played against him many times. I know what he can do. All he's gotta do is get on the field. I'm like a fan of the game. So when we get done getting out adjustments on defense, I like to watch the offense. And then I watch him off the line, man, he's still giving people that salsa. He goes one way, they go another.

Q: What is your on-field mentality?

A: I'm the most cool, calm, collected person you'll ever meet. You can't rattle me, I'll just be chilling. That's just my mindset, I'm always calm. Because I know at any course of the game, anything can happen. So I keep myself level. If you see me make a play, I don't celebrate, I don't do all that too much, I don't get high, and I don't get low. I just stay the course, I just stay the same.

Q: What is the best visual Ben McAdoo has shown the team?

A: Muhammad Ali got knocked down [by Chuck Wepner in 1975], you could see on his face that he was mad, and he got back up and went to wailing on dude. You get knocked down, but you get back up, you get back up swinging.

Q: How would you describe Packers receiver Jordy Nelson?

A: He's a veteran guy that's savvy. Good in his route-running, and has the top-end speed to separate. I think one thing he does well is he knows how to body himself, and he has a quarterback that's gonna put it right on the money.

Q: Randall Cobb?

A: Put him in different spots and he can make it happen from any position. He has the quickness and explosive-ness to get open and get away from defenders.

Q: Aaron Rodgers?

A: They put a lot on him to make the calls and to just win the ballgame for 'em. He's not careless with the ball and he just makes it happen and he's consistent with it. And his delivery is so fast and so accurate that it's crazy, it's hard for a defender.

Q: What do you think Tom Brady's mindset will be Sunday returning from his Deflategate suspension?

A: I think he's coming back with a vengeance. He has that winning attitude, so I think he's gonna come back and make a statement.

Q: Can anybody cover Pittsburgh's Antonio Brown?

Q: Growing up, did you want to play in the NFL?

A: It was a dream, but it wasn't a dream that I thought was reachable.

Q: How do you like playing in New York?

A: I love it, man. I call it the place of opportunity, man. Many things can happen out here. It's a big market, so you gotta hold yourself accountable. It's like you gotta be on top of your game. You have ups and downs, don't get me wrong, but here, you have to perform, and I think it kind of forces you to.

Giants Host Senator Cory Booker at Internal Meeting on Race Relations

By Bill Pennington
NY Times
October 12, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Inside the auditorium at the Giants' training and practice complex late Wednesday afternoon, players filled the rows, listening attentively to the midweek message preceding another big N.F.L. weekend.

Coach Ben McAdoo was there, taking notes. Also in attendance was General Manager Jerry Reese, who sat alongside other members of the front-office staff.

It was a football setting. The topic for more than an hour — improving race relations in the United States — was anything but.

About 25 Giants, or almost half the roster, gathered to talk about the impact of race on their lives and to discuss the ways they could become more prominently involved in the growing national debate on the subject.

The group, which was a mix of African-American and white players, had also invited a guest to help focus the discussion: Senator Cory A. Booker, Democrat of New Jersey.

It was a spirited discourse and exchange of ideas, with the players often driving the dialogue.

"I saw a thoughtfulness and a love of this country, and these guys don't want to be sitting on the sidelines, so to speak — they want to be in the game," Booker said.

He added, "They have a lot of power and a powerful sense of responsibility not to be silent in all of this."

Running back Rashad Jennings, who invited Booker, has led much of the team's internal discussion on the subject.

"We wanted somebody who can educate us and point us in the right direction in terms of the possibilities for us," Jennings said. "We wanted to know the various things we could do."

Jennings predicted that the meeting, which was closed to members of the news media but was recounted in detail by participants afterward, would lead more Giants to become socially engaged.

"There is nothing special about us; we're just in a special position," Jennings said. "We get to be a magnifying glass for things that are important. People will listen to the things we have to say, and we can generate conversation on issues."

The Giants' discussions began in the aftermath of several fatal police shootings of African-Americans around the country and the decision by San Francisco quarterback Colin Kaepernick to kneel in protest during the playing of the national anthem at 49ers games.

So far, each Giant has decided to stand during the anthem, but the players have opened a dialogue with the team's management about a variety of issues. Jennings was part of a text-messaging group of more than 80 N.F.L. players dedicated to deliberating on what players could do to make their voices heard. Jennings thought it would be a good idea to have someone address the team.

The Giants recommended Booker, a former mayor of Newark and an African-American who played football at Stanford. Jennings wrote Booker a letter about two weeks ago.

"I was frankly blown away by the letter," Booker said Wednesday. "They wanted to explore where they can make a difference."

Booker later said he had talked about a range of topics, including the escalating rates of imprisonment in the United States and the modern judicial system and its sometimes unobserved collateral effects.

"He did a good job of making us aware of the relevant issues that go way beyond what you see on social media," Giants linebacker Jonathan Casillas said. "They are things we don't really know or see. But those are the things that you do need to know if you're going to make a plan to help make changes."

There was conversation about differing backgrounds and childhood environments, with both African-American and white players participating. The Giants' roster is nearly 85 percent black.

"Every single player was engaged in the conversation for the entire hour," said Jocelyn Benson, who acted as a moderator and is the chief executive of the Ross Initiative in Sports for Equality, a nonprofit organization dedicated to improving race relations through sports. "There was a lot of sharing of perspectives and stories."

Jennings said he hoped the Giants had provided a model for other teams to follow.

"There is a lot of talk around the league about what to do," Jennings said. "They can take this as a model and a platform for what to do with all that energy."

Jennings and Casillas both said they thought the meeting would spur a commitment to action.

"This meeting is going to be the catalyst for what's going to happen next," Casillas said. "And something is going to happen. As we learned today, sometimes these things can take time. So I don't know when, but we're all working on it. We're all believing in our hearts that something has got to change. And it's only right to get together like we did today and try to help make that happen."

Jennings complimented the Giants organization and McAdoo for encouraging them from the beginning of the season to become involved in arenas outside football.

"McAdoo stood up in front of us on the first day of training camp and told us that he will never know what it's like to be a black man or a woman," Jennings said. "He said, 'I'm a blue-collar man from Pennsylvania, and football is all I know.'"

"He doesn't act like he has all the answers, but he's open to the dialogue."

Wednesday's meeting, Jennings said, will be empowering.

"We've been informed, and it's new information that we needed," he said, sitting in a players' lounge adjacent to the team's practice fields. "We can now collectively take that information into the locker room and have these kinds of conversations with the guys."

"And now we can pinpoint and target some things. We can't do everything; we know that. But it's a start to begin focusing in on some of the things we want to do from our locker room. Athletes can have a lot of power if they have conviction and are willing to take the appropriate steps after they speak."

Giants rookie Roger Lewis shares milestone TD with Eli Manning

By Art Stapleton

EAST RUTHERFORD — Hundreds of text messages flooded Roger Lewis Jr.'s phone.

Truth be told, the Giants' rookie wide receiver has yet to sift through them all in the aftermath of Sunday's 27-23 victory over the Baltimore Ravens in a game where he caught the first touchdown of his NFL career, which also doubled as his first reception.

The message with the most meaning for Lewis was the first one received: from his mother.

"She was home watching the game with my little sister," Lewis said, smiling. "She said she was proud of me, and I'm excited because she's going to London [for the Giants' game Sunday against the L.A. Rams]. My phone was going crazy, and then Odell [Beckham Jr.] shouted me out on Instagram — it was all over after that."

Lewis said he'll ask Eli Manning to sign the football he got to keep even though it also holds historical significance for the Giants' two-time Super Bowl MVP quarterback.

That's because Lewis' first touchdown was also the 300th TD pass for Manning.

"No problem, he can have it," Manning said. "It's his first one; I've got 300 other ones.

"That first one is a special one and he deserves it."

"I wouldn't have complained if he wanted the ball at all," Lewis added. "He's done a lot in this league, and this is a special one. It was a special moment, just huge for me, too, and I feel like it's a blessing from God.

"But to be honest, now it's over with -- time to beat L.A. now."

When the Giants took the field with 2:04 remaining in Sunday's game, Lewis was actually in the huddle at the start of what ended up as the winning drive before Beckham jogged on and replaced him.

Beckham said after the game he was not sure if he'd be able to finish the game due to the left hip pointer he suffered in the second quarter. He initially told Lewis he would be the one who caught the game-winner, but the former wound up saving the day with his 66-yard touchdown catch from Manning with 1:24 remaining.

On Wednesday, Beckham was named NFC Offensive Player of the Week for the first time in his career for his performance (eight catches, 222 yards, two TDs). "I just told him [before the drive], 'Let's go O, go be great,'" Lewis recalled. "And he was."

Landon Collins talks amazing pick-six and his speech

By Steve Serby

NY Post

November 6, 2016

Giants defensive back Landon Collins, who had a sensational interception return for a touchdown against the Rams last week in London, covers some Q&A with Post columnist Steve Serby.

Q: What is it like inside this year's defensive huddle?

A: It's more tenacity, and selfishness, but in the way the defense needs to be run. And hungry.

Q: What do you mean by selfishness?

A: So I had a talk [Friday], and I was like using selfishness as a way ...

Q: You had to talk?

A: We have a thing called G. I. — Giants Insightful words. I talked about selfishness. We all play this game a certain way to get to where we're at now and to get to the highest level, and it's the NFL. And, everybody had that selfishness about them back in high school, college that every play they think they can make a play, or change a play, or be a playmaker. But I meant be selfish, but be selfish within the defense. So let's say, you're running a blitz, if you think you could beat him quickly inside, but you know you're outside contain, but you see that hole right there and think you can get there before the quarterback, and you know the quarterback's not a running quarterback, within the defense go get it, and be a playmaker. Change the game.

Q: So did you know Friday would be your turn?

A: Yeah. I actually was supposed to go against the Saints, but I wasn't ready (laugh).

Q: What do you mean you weren't ready?

A: I didn't know what to say, 'cause as a young [second-year] guy, I haven't seen a lot. I mean, I'm respected on the team, but I still think of myself as a young guy. These guys have five, some of 'em, eight years on me that I'm talking to. How can I really get to them and make 'em feel how I feel about this game, and how passionate I feel about it. So when [defensive coordinator Steve Spagnuolo] asked me Week [2] against the Saints, I was like,

"Let me get the Philly game." I really asked for the Philly game because that's when I really like had an awesome game, had my first-ever interception in my career in the NFL, and from that point on, I was playing good.

Q: So did you work on your speech Thursday night? Did you write it out?

A: I didn't write it out. When you're talking to your brothers, your teammates, your coaches, it's something that has to come from the heart.

Q: How long did you speak for?

A: Five minutes.

Q: Is this in front of the whole team?

A: In front of the whole defense. And the coaches, and Coach [Ben] McAdoo.

Q: Where do you do it?

A: We do it in the fieldhouse.

Q: Were you nervous?

A: I was nervous the whole day, since I woke up (chuckle). [Spagnuolo] texted me [Thursday night]. He said, "You got it on Philly." I said, "Alright, cool." I was hoping the last Philly game, but not the first one. So we were on meetings [Friday] and I'm writing down things I want to talk about. And I talked about accountability, trust, selfishness.

Q: Who has given the best Friday talk?

A: Snacks [Damon Harrison]. It was more of like gritty, hungry, be what you're supposed to be, do what you're supposed to do, do it fast, and ball out.

Q: Tell me more about your speech.

A: I chose accountable first because you have so many OBWs — Oh By the Ways — in this defense, that if you don't know it, that one time it happens, it could change the whole game, or it could have us lose the game. So be accountable for everything you're supposed to do and everything you're supposed to know. Second was trust, it was more about we're a brotherhood, I see those guys and I know that [Jonathan Casillas] is gonna be where he's supposed to be, and [Olivier Vernon] is gonna contain like he's supposed to contain and do what he's supposed to do, and I have that trust so if I'm doing something, I know he's there, and I don't have to second-guess it, because if I'm second-guessing it, it's causing me to play slow and not doing my job to the fullest I'm supposed to be doing, and have the next guy next to me trust me and then he plays it different the next time. It's a chain link that if one cracks or breaks, everyone breaks.

Q: And selfishness?

A: Do what you did to get here and continue doing it. Don't just get lackadaisical because you made it to the NFL. There's more to the NFL than just making it. We all make it, but you also could lose it the next day. Or you could lose it in the next second.

Q: How was it received?

A: They loved it.

Q: How do you know that?

A: They came up to me and they told me, "Great speech. For a young guy." They were like, "Man, that was good."

Q: You stepped up.

A: Yeah ... for a guy that don't speak. I don't speak. I speak on the field. I have to. I need to. That's the way I motivate myself. I get my mindset ready, get my guys knowing that, "I'm here, I'm ready to play." But when I'm here, I'm more of a quiet, behind the scenes guy.

Q: What's it like being a star?

A: I wouldn't call myself a star, just a player that's accountable, and knows what's going on, and is playing fast. That's what I would say. I wouldn't call myself a star.

Q: Why wouldn't you want to be considered a star?

A: I wouldn't say 'cause I'm not broadcast on TV like Earl Thomas or Kam Chancellor or Eric Weddle, stuff like that.

Q: Where do you think you rate as far as NFL safeties?

A: I know I'm in the top 10, definitely, the way I'm playing each and every down, playing fast, making the plays that I see other great safeties have made and are doing.

Q: How many times have you watched your pick-six against the Rams?

A: That day, maybe like 30 times.

Q: On the plane?

A: On the plane, yeah. 'Cause everybody sent it to me, so I watched it about 30 times (smile).

Q: What was it like watching it 30 times?

A: After you watch yourself after the first like 10 times, you just watch the other players, you watch the sidelines, you just try to listen to the stands to see like every moment what was going on.

Q: You've said you want to be known for miraculous plays. Do you actually visualize these plays?

A: I picture these moments every day. Pick sixes, forced fumbles, sacks, everything. Every game I picture myself making a great play. One great play, two great plays, any kind of way I can. Every game.

Q: Give me the most miraculous play you have envisioned.

A: A 99-yard interception return. It could be a game-changer or it don't have to be a game-changer. It could just be one of those moments and just running and hear the crowd yell all the way down the sideline. I did it once — it wasn't 99 yards, it was [88] in college [for Alabama against Tennessee in 2013]. But just to hear it. You don't hear it [during] 'cause you're zoned out. You focus on make sure nobody catches you from behind, nobody trying to come poke the ball out, or you don't trip and fall over yourself (laugh), stuff like that. You're 100 percent focused on just getting to the goal line.

A: One is to be a Pro Bowler, be a first ballot to the Pro Bowl. Just be one of the difference-makers on the team.

Q: Any number of picks, tackles?

A: I don't have numbers on tackles, I always try to get over 100. Picks, at least six or seven. This is my first time making sacks, I only have two. So now that I've made 'em and I'm used to it now, try to get at least about five a year.

Q: On a scale of 1-10, how high is your confidence level right now?

A: A 10.

Q: And last year?

something, I know he's there, and I don't have to second-guess it, because if I'm second-guessing it, it's causing me to play slow and not doing my job to the fullest I'm supposed to be doing, and have the next guy next to me trust me and then he plays it different the next time. It's a chain link that if one cracks or breaks, everyone breaks.

Q: And last year?

A: The second half, I was more of a 7-8. The first half it was more like a 4-5.

Q: What kind of a career do you want to have?

A: I want to have a Hall of Fame career and have the chance to have a yellow jacket.

Q: You think about that?

A: Yes. I've been thinking about that since high school.

Q: What is it about you that you think gives you a chance to get there one day?

A: The way I play, my character, the passion I play with, it's not unseen. I know everything that I do is being seen and everything I'm doing is being heard and being accounted for.

Q: Do you want to be perceived as an intimidator?

A: Yes, I want to be seen as an intimidating. I think I'm accounted for a lot, 'cause I've been good so far, and I think teams have taken notice to it.

Q: In 25 words or less, describe "Jackrabbit" Janoris Jenkins.

A: Smart.

Q: Vernon.

A: Scary.

Q: Scary how?

A: Scary as in really a force to reckon with. You don't know what you're gonna get from him, like as a pass rusher, he could bull rush you, he's got all the moves, he's got everything in his category that he could do, he's just so swift with it.

Q: Snacks.

A: Monster.

Q: Jason Pierre-Paul.

A: Elusive.

Q: Casillas.

A: Savvy.

Q: Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie.

A: Best athlete on the field.

Q: Victor Cruz.

A: Salsy (smile).

Q: Sterling Shepard.

A: A go-getter.

Q: Why everyone loves Odell Beckham Jr.

A: Not many people see what goes on in the locker room and stuff like that, just the character he is, the personality he has, and then the way he switches it to the field, is "I'm the best athlete on the field."

Q: What did you think of him playing hurt in London?

A: That's expected of him. We're from the same city [New Orleans], we're from the same place, we grew up the same way. You're built totally different. Definitely the school you went to, and definitely the stuff we were around, you have to be tough. We were more mentally tough before we got to college, and they built more mental toughness into us because of how we grew up.

Q: Why are you able to deal with being a professional football player in New York?

A: I'm very mentally tough. It's hard to break my toughness.

Q: Where are you recognized by Giants fans?

A: Walmart, Target. ... Definitely Target (laugh). I got a man there, I walk in every time, he says, "Landon!" It's fantastic to be recognized by the fans. It's love because you're making somebody smile.

Q: Quarterbacks you want to intercept?

A: I want the Tom Brady one back (laugh) definitely. I want to at least get all the top quarterbacks. You want the Tom Bradys, you want the Aaron Rodgers, you want the Drew Breeses ... definitely Big Ben [Roethlisberger].

Q: How do you think Alabama coach Nick Saban would have liked coaching in New York?

A: I don't think he'd like all the traffic and fast pace.

Q: Favorite New York City things?

A: I haven't visited the World Trade Center yet. I visited the Statue Liberty. I haven't ridden the subway yet. But I've been to Yankee Stadium — not to watch the Yankees, I went to watch a soccer game. And I went to watch the Knicks play.

Q: Odell does this Head and Shoulders commercial. Let me see if I can get you an endorsement.

A: I love cars.

Q: Any particular brand?

A: My favorite brand is Aston Martin.

Q: What kind of car do you drive?

A: Right now I drive a BMW.

Q: What else can you endorse?

A: I wear a lot of colorful things, as in like shirts, wristbands. I wear headbands a lot, too.

Humble, Landon Collins Anchors New York Giants Defense

By Pattie Traina
Inside Football
November 6, 2016

In just his second season, New York Giants safety Landon Collins has turned into a rock solid performer for the Big Blue defense.

Only 22 years old, the 6-0, 216-pound Collins is too young to remember the glory days of the fierce Giants defenses that were mostly make up your classic blue-collar types. Those who showed up for work, gave all that they had, and went home at the end of the day—usually with a win.

Yet somehow, in just his second season, he has managed to be affected by the spirit of those throwback legends whose images adorn the walls of the Quest Diagnostics Training Center and whose names hang from the Ring of Honor at MetLife Stadium.

As humble a fellow as @TheHumble_21 suggests, Collins has come a long way in just a season and a half.

Great Expectations

Like so many other young boys who start in Pop Warner and advance through high school and college playing football, Collins had dreams of playing in the NFL.

In choosing his college, he hitched his wagon to Nick Saban's program at Alabama. The Crimson Tide program has a storied history of producing top-shelf NFL players who typically enjoyed shorter learning curves when making the leap from college to the pro level. Of course, that's thanks to Saban's structured program that emulates that of an NFL team.

To be successful in Saban's program, it's said that a young man has to be committed, intelligent, determined, and—perhaps the most important quality of all—willing to be molded into a man.

"Coach Saban's mentally challenged us as young boys," Collins recalled. "He pushed us to the limit to where we didn't think we could get to exceed."

Not that Collins, who is self-motivated, needed a lot of pushing. But that extra shove he might have gotten from Saban put him right on track to realizing his NFL dream. In three seasons for the Crimson Tide, Collins finished with 184 career tackles, including 8.5 for a loss. He also produced five interceptions while breaking up 13 passes, forcing three fumbles while recovering four.

In sophomore season in 2013, Collins finished third in the SEC in interception return yards with 89, as well as seventh in forced fumbles. In 2014, his 99 tackles ranked 10th in the SEC while his three interceptions ranked eighth, all of which contributed to his selection as a Consensus All-American honoree.

In addition to his hard-hitting ways on defense, Collins also served as a part-time return specialist, returning three kickoffs in his final year at Alabama for 55 yards and recording one punt return for 13 yards as a freshman.

By the end of his junior year, Collins was ready to head to the NFL. While he knew that he stood a very good chance of being drafted high—NFL.com projected him to be a first-round pick—Collins' battle to live up to the high expectations he had of himself was just getting started.

Finding His Way

No matter how well prepared a young man might think he is for the bright lights of the NFL, there is always going to be a learning curve that, if not managed properly, can sometimes swallow a young man up whole.

Although Collins was well prepared after having gone through the rigors of Saban's program, there were steps along the young man's path to the NFL that didn't always work out the way he hoped.

First, Collins was not drafted in the first round, a disappointing development considering his ranking as the top safety in the 2015 draft class. Second, Collins dreamed of playing for Washington, the very same team that once employed his idol, the late Sean Taylor.

Instead, Collins ended up being the first pick—No. 33 overall—in the second round. The Giants, one of Washington's most heated division rivals, traded up seven spots in that round to snatch Collins off the board.

"Oh, that was way more pressure than ever," Collins admitted. "I was like, 'They came up and got me. They're expecting a lot out of me.'"

"When I went to college, I knew they expected a lot out of me, but not as soon because I knew they had guys in front of me which let me take it step by step. But here, I couldn't take it step by step because I didn't have that much time."

That lack of time was due to the Giants' decision to move on from veterans such as Antrel Rolle and Stevie Brown, who were eschewed in favor of the youth movement led by Collins.

"I thought they would keep Antrel, and when I heard they let him go, I thought, 'There's nobody there,'" Collins said. "I looked at all the safeties we had on the roster and none of them actually played except for Nat (Berhe), who played in a few games. Knowing that, I knew I had a lot to learn."

A Lifeline

If Collins appeared, at times, to be overwhelmed on your television screen during his rookie campaign, that's because he was.

With no mentor at his position to guide him (as guys such as Mark Barron, Vinnie Sunseri, HaHa Clinton-Dix and Robert Lester did in college) and with the entire defense having to learn a brand-new system under Steve Spagnuolo (re-hired by the Giants after having departed the team following the 2008 season), Collins initially had nowhere to turn for help among his peers.

"I was trying to figure it out," he said. "I knew I was a rookie and I wasn't expected to know everything right then and there when I came through the door, but then I have one of the hardest jobs on the field where I have to control the whole back end of the defense and be on with right signals and right terminology. I had a lot on my shoulders."

It also didn't help that the injury bug tore through the Giants safeties, which forced Collins to have to play alongside of a different face perhaps more often than he would have liked and to maybe do things that might not have made the best use of his talent.

"A lot of guys were changing around me," he said. "It over-consumed me and I was trying to dig my way out."

While Collins had safeties coach Dave Merritt and Spagnuolo himself to lean on, when it came to the finer points of learning the defense, Collins went outside the box for help.

One veteran whose brain Collins routinely picked was Jon Beason, a three-time Pro Bowl linebacker known for his meticulous preparation and experience in navigating through a change in defensive coordinators throughout his career.

"I talked to Jon because he's gone through a system change before," Collins said. "He knew the defense. He's smart and he knew what was going on. Guys like that, you try to get under their wing."

When he wasn't spending time breaking down film with Beason, Collins was working with Merritt, a former NFL linebacker who spent three seasons as a player before crossing over to coaching.

"(Merritt) was very helpful to me because, while I knew run concepts and gap schemes and stuff like that, he helped me with more of the back-end stuff—making the right calls and the position we had to be in and what to do in certain situations."

Collins ultimately started to see the shoreline, though he admitted, "not as fast as we all expected or wanted."

Whereas some guys might have become frustrated, Collins kept his eye on the prize.

"I've been through the worst. I knew time would tell, and I had to keep on moving with it," he said.

By the time his rookie season ended, Collins finished as the team's leader in total tackles with 108, including five tackles for a loss. He also recorded one interception, broke up nine passes and forced one fumble.

Despite making baby steps toward improvement, it was his big drop of a potential game-sealing interception thrown by New England quarterback Tom Brady in a Week 10 game that allowed the Patriots to drive downfield toward a come-from-behind 27-26 victory.

In the blink of an eye, that one moment seemed to wipe away an otherwise-impressive showing by Collins that included five tackles and a pass defense on the first snap of New England's final possession. However, that one play didn't crush the will and determination of Collins. Instead, it motivated him to show the Giants just what he was made of.

Man on a Mission

A team knows it truly has something special in a drafted player when that player takes a massive jump from his rookie season to his second year. Collins, who is always striving to get better to this very day, was determined to make that leap, even though he knew it wouldn't be easy.

When the offseason came around and he had taken a couple of weeks off to let his body heal, he immediately threw himself into a renewed dedication to his craft by taking the lessons he learned as a rookie and moving forward.

One change he made was his approach to studying the game, something he had learned from watching film with Beason and Merritt. The veteran and his positional coach taught him how to dig deeper into the film to find little things that a college player might either miss or rely on his coach to tell him.

Then there was the weight issue. Like many people, Collins had a sweet tooth, his vice being vanilla Oreo cookies. By swearing off the cookies and paying closer attention to what he put into his body, Collins lost 12 pounds, dropping from 228 to 216 pounds.

The other thing he sought to improve was his man-to-man coverage, a part of his game that, in his rookie season, he felt could improve.

These changes have certainly paid off. Collins is not only more confident with what he's doing—confidence alone can enable one to play faster—but he's also physically able to keep up with what he's processing in his mind as a play unfolds.

Through the Giants' first seven games, Collins again leads the team in total tackles with 57. He is also the team leader in sacks with two, is tied with corners Janoris Jenkins and Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie for the team lead in interceptions (2), and is second in tackles for a loss (4).

His Week 7 performance against the Los Angeles Rams was one for the ages. He not only returned an interception for a touchdown, but his second interception of that game set up the Giants game-winning scoring drive, capping a performance that earned him NFC Defensive Player of the Week honors.

"It's not too big for him. It never was at the beginning, and it isn't now," said Spagnuolo. "The one thing I really like about him is [that] when he makes a mistake or something doesn't go well, he's the kind of guy [who] can shake it off really quick. And he works every day. We're always doing ball drills; he's always talking about the scheme. He's done a great job."

Spagnuolo smiled when it was pointed out that Collins is holding up well, despite once again dealing with a revolving door in the defensive secondary due to injuries,

"He wouldn't say that it bothers him because you just play with the guy that's there, but there's something to [having continuity]," he said. "It's like anything else; when you get a little bit of chemistry with somebody, it makes you feel more comfortable [during] the game. I'm sure he's been working through that."

Spirit in the Sky

When Collins arrived at New York, it was important for him to acquire jersey number 21—a number worn by Rodgers-Cromartie last year. That number, which Giants fans usually recall as having belonged to running back Tiki Barber, was also worn by Sean Taylor with Washington during the 2005-07 seasons.

There's rarely a day that goes by that Collins, who sometimes makes a hand gesture toward the sky, holding up his index, middle and pinky fingers to form "21" in honor of his fallen idol, doesn't pause to remember Taylor.

He smiled when asked what he thought Taylor, a man he never met, might have to say to him if he were alive today to see him play.

"I think I would want him to say I'm playing like an animal," Collins said with a smile. "I'm playing with a lot of intensity and playing with a lot of fierce in my heart and a chip on my shoulder. That's the way he played the game, the way a lot of us like to play the game, because this game could be here and gone in a matter of seconds or minutes."

Collins smiled again when asked what he'd like to ask Taylor.

"My biggest question," he said, pausing to think it over for just a bit before responding, "would be how he finds the passion to play the game every day."

Collins quickly clarified that he, too, has passion for the game of football, but that Taylor's passion for the game was like none other he's ever seen.

"The guys I talked to that knew him and played with him—(running back) Clinton Portis and (linebacker) LaVar Arrington—said he was like a different breed, given the intensity and mindset he had. He was the best; dudes were telling me that he would leave his car at practice and jog home. It's amazing to hear about him doing stuff like that."

Between his college pedigree and his survival during a rough rookie campaign, Collins hopes to become a Pro Bowl safety and be recognized annually as an All-Pro. He believes he's still scratching the surface.

"There's plenty more," he said when asked if fans have seen the best he has to offer. "It's a long season, and as the season goes on, you're still getting better."

"I'm still learning a lot of things, and I think by my fourth season, it's going to be the Landon Collins everyone saw in college."

Giants' Paul Perkins opens up on Twitter silence, NFL 'nerd' and Super Bowl

By Steve Serby

NY Post

November 12, 2016

Giants rookie rusher Paul Perkins ran through some Q&A with Post columnist Steve Serby.

Q: What are your personal goals for the second half of the season?

A: The way I feel about this, however I can help us win a Super Bowl, that's what I'm gonna do. If they need me to be a blocking running back every down, I'll do that. If they need me to go run the ball every down, I'll do that. Shoot, they need me to play receiver or offensive lineman, I'll go out there and do that (smile). But I'm so driven to just get a Super Bowl ring. That's my dream.

Q: Is that a realistic dream?

A: I think it is. We have the guys in the room, we have the guys in the building to make it happen I think. And I think we have the coaching staff that'll put us over the top. So I think we can do it. We just gotta all get on board.

Q: How do you like playing in this market?

A: I'm not on social media or anything like that, so the spotlight or the critics and the accolades I don't really see too much. But being here in front of the New York fans, I love it. They're gonna let you know when you're doing bad, but they're also gonna let you know when you're doing something good and give you love, so I love it out here.

Q: Why aren't you on social media?

A: Just kind of stay off of the outside noise because fans, critics, just everything kind of can distract you from the task. I'm only here for what ... playing football four months, five months? So I think I can put down social media for five months to achieve a Super Bowl ring.

Q: What drives you?

A: I really want to be the best. I always play with a chip on my shoulders. Been overlooked for a majority of my football career. Really just wanted to get my name out and be one of the best to play.

Q: Why do you think you've been overlooked?

A: That's just how it is. I'm not the biggest, I'm not the fastest guy, but I go out there and work hard each and every day.

Q: What is your on-field mentality?

A: Focused. I don't get too high or too low. I do get excited when the defense makes a big play, but when I'm extremely focused on the task at hand.

Q: What is it like standing in the tunnel before running out to play for the New York Giants?

A: Honestly, man, that's probably one of the best feelings — just seeing the smoke, and hearing the crowd, and being next to your brothers, teammates out there. It's the stuff that you see on TV and ESPN, so I love it.

Q: You don't mind when they let you know when you're doing bad?

A: No, I mean (chuckle), that's what they're there for. They gotta keep us in check, too. They gotta keep us accountable for our plays and actions on the field.

Q: Are you recognized anywhere around town?

A: I go in and out of places smooth and easy (laugh).

A: Yeah (laugh).

Q: Are you going to be OK with being recognized?

A: I love talking and interacting with the fans.

Q: Whatever comes to your mind: Eli Manning.

A: Obviously a leader. Tremendous poise under pressure. Really understands the offense and the situation and gets us in the best position to win the game.

Q: Odell Beckham Jr.

A: Passionate. I admire him for the passion that he plays with. I go out there every day and watch him practice, and it makes me want to practice harder, and try to beat him in practice. Whatever he's doing, if he's running X amount of yards after the catch, I want to run further than that.

Q: Landon Collins.

A: Tremendously smart. He's a great football player, very instinctual. He wants to know just as much about the offense as he does defense. I always see him watching film after practice on the iPad — I didn't even know the iPad had the film — but somehow he's watching the film.

Q: He used to be a running back.

A: (Smile) I could tell when he scored in London!

Q: Did you like some of his moves?

A: Yeah. I'm definitely gonna take a couple.

Q: What running backs have you taken bits and pieces from?

A: Any of the top-tier guys, I've taken something, just a little bit from them. Anywhere from as far back as Eric Dickerson to Jamaal Charles ... Arian Foster, I love the way he runs, too. There's a lot. ... Marshall Faulk, Brian Westbrook. I liked Eddie George a lot. ... Steven Jackson ... Larry Johnson, I really liked him in his prime when he was doing his thing ... DeShaun Foster.

Q: I read Marshawn Lynch somewhere.

A: Yeah, he has great lateral movement and great cuts for a guy that's known as a bruising back.

Q: Adrian Peterson?

A: Yeah, he runs with so much tenacity, it's kind of hard not to just pick up something. He also has great lateral movement too, and he also has a nasty stiff-arm.

Q: How is your stiff-arm?

A: I work on it, so I just need to put it in use one of these days. When the time comes, it'll be OK.

Q: What would a young kid be smart to take from your game?

A: Just my cutting ability, being able to make guys miss or just be able to read the body language of a defender.

Q: Sterling Shepard.

A: Great athlete. He rarely makes the same mistake twice, that's why he's out there so much. Tremendous hands, I rarely see him drop a ball at all. And he goes out there every day with a smile on his face, and he's out there working every day just like Odell is. He's out there sprinting, he's after practice catching balls. He takes it very seriously.

Q: You're a student of the game, very observant about what different guys bring to the table.

A: This is my job (laugh), so I mean, I have no choice but to watch, when I'm in the midst of greatness or someone I admire, I'm gonna take something from them.

Q: You've studied running backs from more than 15 years ago.

A: Yeah, that's just me just bringing a nerd (laugh) I love football.

Q: Janoris Jenkins.

A: Every time he makes a play, I said he's a lock-down corner. I think he's having a Pro Bowl season right now. He'll shut down a quarter, half the field.

Q: Eli Apple.

A: He's awesome, man, I love Eli. He's very instinctual also, he has great feet. For him being so young, he plays like a veteran guy. He makes veteran moves, and even though he's been injured a couple of times, I think he has a capability of being one of the best. I know why the Giants picked him so high.

Q: Tight end Jerell Adams.

A: I think he's peaking at the right time. He's starting to understand the offense. He's getting more comfortable being out there with the best of the best.

Q: Weston Richburg.

A: He's a leader, man. He really takes command, and takes great pride in the offensive line. He's extremely mobile, and he has extreme amounts of grit, that no matter if the guy is 390 or whatever, 400 pounds, he's gonna make sure his guy doesn't make the play.

Q: Ereck Flowers.

A: He has good lateral movement, very good punch for an offensive lineman.

Q: Coach Ben McAdoo.

A: Precise. He doesn't leave any stone unturned, that's what I like about him. He's a lot like [UCLA] Coach [Jim] Mora in the sense he wants everything be done right, everything to have a purpose behind it.

Q: Does the year Ezekiel Elliott is having surprise you?

A: Oh no. He's a really good running back, much like you saw in college. He's very physical, make guys miss, break tackles, alongside with probably one of the best offensive lines.

Q: You were taken in the fourth round. Do you still keep tabs on the running backs drafted ahead of you?

A: I know Jordan Howard [drafted by the Bears one pick before Perkins] is doing really well. I know [Denver's] Devontae Booker's doing well. I know Kenyan Drake [Dolphins] just got off of injury. I know [DeAndre] Washington, he's getting a lot of run with the Raiders. ... I don't know if Tyler Ervin [Texans] is getting too much play. I think he's playing on special teams. Kenneth Dixon [Ravens], he's doing pretty well. ... (Laugh) So yeah, I do.

Q: It still motivates you and drives you?

A: Yeah, yeah. It goes along with being overlooked for a majority of my football career, but seeing those guys doing well motivates me to go out there and do just as good if not better than those guys.

Q: Give me a Paul Perkins scouting report.

A: He's fast, can make the first guy miss, is not afraid to make cutbacks, will make moves, struggled in ID'ing defenses, could be stronger in his pass blocking. Special teams, he'll run down on kickoff, not knowing what he's supposed to do, but he's running down — I'm just joking (laugh).

Q: So you're not the finished product yet?

A: No, not yet. I think I still have a lot of maturing to do.

Q: But you don't think you would be a liability in pass protection?

A: No, not at all.

Q: Who are athletes in other sports you admire?

A: Obviously LeBron James ... Chris Paul ... Serena Williams ... [Novak] Djokovic ... Wayne Rooney [or Manchester United] ... Ronaldo ... the list can go on ... Usain Bolt ... Tyson Gay ... [Lionel] Messi. They all have a competitive spirit, and they all are driven for something greater in themselves.

Q: Superstitions?

Q: When did your NFL dream begin?

A: Seeing my dad [Paul "Bruce" Perkins, who played briefly in the NFL] and his game balls in the room, and just always having that dream of making the big play or play in the Super Bowl, or whatever it may be.

Q: Describe your best run ever, for Chandler High in Arizona against Mesquite High School.

A: It's just like an inside-zone play, and then I see an opening, I see the guy going for my legs, I try to brace for it, and lo and behold, I stick a foot out, stick a hand out and I stay up and end up scoring. He just hit me in the right spot and kind of just torqued my body in the right way, and I didn't really want to go down because it's a good rivalry game, it was a close game, so I tried my best to stay up, and stuck a hand out there, and made it happen.

Q: What did your father tell you about the NFL having played briefly?

A: To enjoy it, have fun, just cherish the moment that you're gonna have with these guys 'cause you only get one opportunity at this.

Q: What is the best dish you cook?

A: I think I've mastered pasta. That's not hard, but finding the right sauces and spices.

A: Martin Luther King, Bernie Mac, Barack Obama.

Q: Favorite movie?

A: "Master of Disguise."

Q: Favorite actors?

A: Denzel [Washington] and Will Smith.

Q: Favorite entertainer?

A: Jamie Foxx.

Q: What's it like being a New York Giant?

A: I'm at a top-tier organization, they're first-class in everything they do. I'm glad I got to start my career here.

Ereck Flowers on decoding his tweets, being Optimus

By Steve Serby

NY Post

November 19, 2016

Second-year Giants offensive tackle Ereck Flowers blocked out some time for some Q&A with Post columnist Steve Serby.

Q: How do you feel about protecting Eli Manning's blind side?

A: We all protect him, man. I've been playing this position since high school, so it's not something that's just new to me. Eli Manning — I kind of see him as like the last Prime. Ever watch "Transformers"? Like Optimus Prime. Like the last Prime, you know the Mannings? You got Peyton Manning, Archie Manning, those great guys, so I kind of see him right now as the last Prime. It's fun, man. I never thought I'd be playing for the New York Giants blocking for Eli Manning.

Q: Tell me about Eli.

A: Same guy every day, very detailed. One of the hardest workers. The dude is great, man. I think he's a future Hall of Famer.

Q: From your Twitter feed: "I love people with crazy dreams."

A: A lot of people with crazy dreams, man, they often do amazing things.

Q: Do you have crazy dreams?

A: Yeah, I have crazy dreams.

Q: What is the craziest dream you've had?

A: I don't view none of my dreams to be crazy in my way, because I see them as realistic. Maybe some other people may view it to be crazy.

Q: "I rather 10 lions than 1000 sheep."

A: Yeah, I'd rather go into battle with somebody that's gonna fight with me.

Q: "Don't want what the average man wants."

A: You never want to be average in life.

Q: That goes along with having crazy dreams I guess, right?

A: Yeah.

Q: "We go through hell to get to paradise."

A: Sometimes you go through hard places to get to where you really want to be.

Q: What's the hardest place you've been through?

A: Hardest place I've been through? I've had family members die. ... Whether it's going through having a bad game and having to come back the next game, it's a lot of things that everybody goes through on a regular basis.

Q: "I get up when I fall."

A: No matter how bad things are, no matter however it gets, I'm never gonna stay down on myself. I'm always gonna lift myself up and keep going forward.

Q: "Wake up every morning with the mind frame I'm chasing something."

A: It's an everyday grind, it's not just a one-time thing.

Q: So what are you chasing?

A: I want to be great. I want to be one of the top at my position.

Q: Do you think you can reach that?

A: Yeah, I definitely feel I can reach that. No doubt in my mind.

Q: What makes you believe you can be great?

A: (Pause) What makes me believe I could be great? I can't sit here and write you an essay about it, it's just something I believe.

Q: "Fear is a choice."

A: I feel like a lot of stuff is already written for you in your life. What's gonna happen is gonna happen. There's no need to be scared or fear anything."

Q: Describe Odell Beckham Jr.

A: Freak. Rare. Dude like that, man ... scary (laugh). The things he does, man, is ridiculous.

Q: If you recovered a fumble in the end zone, would you do a dance like he does?

A: I don't know. It depends on how hype the moment is.

Q: You got one in mind?

A: I don't even have one in mind. I guess that makes it more organic.

Q: Describe Landon Collins.

A: Balling. He's a Pro Bowl candidate this year. Man, he's getting a pick about every game. I came in with him, good friend. . . . He's doing his thing right now.

Q: Jason Pierre-Paul.

A: Big dude, strong dude, long dude, fast, quick. He has everything you want in a D-end.

Q: Olivier Vernon.

A: Work ethic is ridiculous. Freak, fast, strong, he's got everything. The type of player you want on your team.

Q: Coach Ben McAdoo.

A: Great coach. Players got his back, he got the players' back, we love playing for him. He's a great person.

Q: How does he motivate?

A: Everything he does is organic, everything he says is how he really feels. We go onto the field, he wants to win just as bad as we do.

Q: Offensive line coach Mike Solari.

A: Great coach. Probably the best coach I ever had. Very detailed. Gets the most out of you everyday whether it's in a walk through, the game. Never lets you settling for less.

Q: Offensive guard Bobby Hart.

A: He's a young player, finding his groove. He's been playing pretty well these past few games, he had a good game last game. Me and him are kind of in the same boat, we came in together, we're just looking to get better, find our way in the league.

Q: Offensive tackle Marshall Newhouse.

A: Smart player. He comes in works hard every day, man. It's gonna be fun playing next to him this game.

Q: How would you describe your on-field mentality?

A: Whatever it takes to win. You try to go out there and be as competitive as you can be out there.

Q: The word "nasty" has been used for your disposition on the field. Is that accurate?

A: Yeah. But there's a lot of people that's nasty. Everybody has their own unique style, and everybody's just trying to win.

Q: What drives you?

A: I don't like losing. To win, that's what really drives me. We're out there trying to get a win is what really drives me.

Q: How good a feeling is it when you know you're wearing an opponent down in the fourth quarter?

A: It's a good feeling, but it's always a better feeling knowing you're winning in the fourth quarter.

Q: How do you like playing in this New York market?

A: It's cool. It has its ups and downs. I don't mind it.

Q: Its ups and downs? Could you elaborate on that?

A: When you do good, everybody's on your side. You do bad, everybody has a lot to say even if they don't know what they're talking about. So it's whatever. I don't really care what anybody really has to say about this O-line, I know it's a good O-line. I only really care about what the coaches say about us.

Q: What do you like about this O-line?

A: Oh man, I think we've really meshed together, man. We really like playing with each other. I think things are falling in place.

Q: Where do you think you need to improve to be a Pro Bowl player?

A: I need to improve everywhere. I just want to improve my entire game.

A: This is Psalm 91.

Q: Why is that one important to you?

A: It's something my grandma [Leola] made me say every day before I went to school.

Q: Tell me about your grandma.

A: Sweet lady. Cares about everybody she comes across. Just a good person in general.

Q: Your father, Everald.

A: He's guided me in everything I've done. Never led me the wrong way, he's always there for me. Always tells what I need to know. He's just my No. 1 supporter.

Q: Bears rookie linebacker Leonard Floyd.

A: He's elusive. He's really progressed this season.

Q: Do you get into Manhattan at all?

A: Yeah, man, I like New York City.

Q: What do you like about it?

A: It's always going. A lot of people here are some of the most ambitious people in the world, man, and it's a lot of things going on. ... There's a lot of people here who made a lot out of nothing.

Q: Who are athletes in other sports you admire?

A: My favorite athlete of all time is Allen Iverson.

Q: Why?

A: He was himself. He didn't try to mesh in of how people think he should be. ... He brought corn rows, tat ... he was himself, and he had his own style. He played the game how he felt it needed to be played.

Q: What is your favorite single memory at the University of Miami?

A: Game-winning drive against North Carolina [in a 27-23 win in 2013].

Q: On Twitter, you were holding up a shirt for "Grief Is Good" — a New Jersey peer support center.

A: That has to do with kids that lost a parent, or growing up without a parent, and those adjustments.

Q: You were 6 when you lost your mom. Tell me about her.

A: She cares of everybody, tried to take care of everybody. She was a great person.

Q: How devastating was that for you?

A: It was hard, but it wasn't that hard because I had a great father and a great family to support me.

A: Malcolm X, Allen Iverson, Muhammad Ali.

Q: Favorite movie?

A: "Next Friday."

Q: Favorite actor?

A: Mike Epps.

Q: Favorite actress?

A: Nia Long.

Q: Favorite comedian?

A: Corey Holcomb.

Q: Favorite meal?

A: Shrimp alfredo.

Q: How good is this team?

A: I feel like we're on the upward rise, man. I think a lot of people counted us out at one point, and we worked our way back into the picture, man. I think we did that through playing for each other.

Q: Do you think this is a playoff team?

A: I felt it was a playoff team before the season even started, so I definitely think it's a playoff team more than ever now.

Q: Have you had a dream about the Super Bowl?

A: I've never had an actual dream about the Super Bowl, but I've envisioned it.

Q: So tell me what you've envisioned.

A: I envision that confetti coming down ... putting the banner up, parade in New York.

A: Yeah.

Q: How does this team's swag compare to the Miami Hurricanes' swag?

A: I think it's similar. Why would you be in a place you don't believe can really do what the goal is?

Humble, Landon Collins Anchors New York Giants Defense

By Pat Leonard
New York Daily News
November 20, 2016

Tom Collins was window-shopping in Biloxi, Mississippi, back in 2001 with his 7-year-old son Landon, when they stopped to gaze at a display of beautiful Rolex watches.

"Dad, get that one," Landon Collins said, excitedly. "That one's nice."

"Dad can't afford that," Tom Collins said with a smile.

Landon turned to face his father, and what he said next, his father couldn't believe:

Plenty of reasons to start getting excited about the Giants "I'm gonna buy you that watch when I make it," his son said. "When I make it to the NFL, I'm gonna buy you that watch."

It has always been Landon Collins' time.

The second-year strong safety is the Giants' fastest-rising star, with 74 tackles, four interceptions, three sacks and a touchdown, including at least one pick in three straight games heading into Sunday's game against the Chicago Bears at MetLife Stadium. He is the first Giants player to win NFC Defensive Player of the Week awards in consecutive games, in Week 7 and 9 wins over the Eagles and Rams.

But Collins' star turn is nothing new. He's always been money. In fact, that's what his dad called him as a kid: "Money." So about that Rolex watch:

"He asks me about it all the time, if he can buy it for me," Tom Collins, 48, a station director of the Coastal Bridge Construction Company in Baton Rouge, La., told the Daily News in a phone interview Friday morning. "I tell him I don't want that watch. Dad doesn't need it. Dad's good."

Tom Collins and son Landon, 6, with his first MVP trophy. Tom's nickname for Landon at this age was 'Money.' Dad coached Landon from 4-to-12 years old, "the most influential coach I've ever had," Landon said this week. And Tom Collins watched proudly on TV on Oct. 23 when his son intercepted Case Keenum at London's Twickenham Stadium, ran to the right side of the field, and then cut back hard, leaving four Rams in the dust on his way to an incredible, 44-yard pick-6.

"I always told him, 'When you're gonna score, you've gotta mean to score,'" his father said. "You can't sidestep or make too many moves. You've just gotta go.' And when he made that one move and cut back, I said, 'He's trying to score.' When he got in, the house went in an uproar."

Landon Collins, 22, by virtue of his success, has a lot of nicknames now. And he's just as approachable and easy-going as his father, who ended a work call during Friday's interview by saying: "That's Tom Collins, just like the drink, but don't get drunk off the name."

Landon Collins listed his many monikers on Friday as he prepared for a three-hour session with personal hairstylist Joanna, who has threaded every color from pink to red to gray to blue into Collins' hair for this fall's big weekends. She'll put some beige into his elaborate hair-do for the Bears game, and he even plans to go red-white-and-blue one time to represent all of the Giants' colors.

"Money is what people back home call me," Collins said with his trademark swagger. "Then here, let's see, there's '21 Savage,' 'Hollywood.' I came in calling myself Hollywood and it seems like that's stuck."

Giants defensive tackle Damon Harrison last week even referred to Collins as "a bad motha-----."

"Playing from high school all the way up to this point, I've been one of those top guys," Collins said of handling this season's success, "and it's second nature now. It's nothing that's surprising me or hitting me off-guard to where I don't know how to control it you know? And I'm grateful for that."

This is the confidence of someone who is used to being the best, which is represented by a long and impressive list of accolades: winning the 2013 BCS National Championship as a freshman at Alabama, unanimous first-team All-American in his final collegiate junior season of 2014; the No. 1-rated safety in the nation coming out of Dutchtown (La.) High School, and the first player in Louisiana Sports Writers Association history to earn SA All-State honors on both sides of the ball.

Collins distinguished himself as unique at a much younger age, though.

The first time he played football, at 4 years old on a picnic with his father, he begged to play with 8-to-10 years old. Landon grabbed the ball-carrier around the legs and got dragged downfield and into the end zone, but he wouldn't let go, and he didn't like his father's advice to be careful against bigger kids.

"I wanted to tackle him," little Landon said.

So Tom Collins started his son the next year playing for Hunter's Field in New Orleans, "and we tried him at quarterback, but every time he grabbed the ball he just ran with it. So we were like, 'We're gonna put you at running back. The next year, everything he touched was just gold at the age of six.'"

That's how Collins explains his skills with the ball in his hands: He used to be a running back. He rushed for 1,218 yards and 21 touchdowns as a senior at Dutchtown. Undrafted rookie free safety Andrew Adams laughs at that explanation, though. It's not that simple.

"I told (Collins) the other day, 'Your returns are really good,'" Adams said. 'He was like, 'I used to be a running back.' I said, 'So, a lot of people used to be a running back, but they still can't return like that. I think that's just being an athlete. His physical, athletic ability is super-high. He's very gifted.'"

Collins had many NFL idols as a kid: former Washington running back Clinton Portis, late former Washington safety Sean Taylor — whom he honors by wearing No. 21 — former Colts safety Bob Sanders, and a quarterback you might have heard of.

"I wanted to be smart like Peyton Manning," Collins said on Thursday in the Giants' locker room. "And no, I haven't told (Eli) that yet."

"That's alright," Manning said with a grin on Friday when told of Collins' admiration for his brother. "I'm a lot younger than Peyton. So, ya know..."

Manning, though, in all seriousness, said Collins' study of a quarterback despite being a safety was good homework because "the best safeties have that quarterback mentality. They can see things, they have to be ready, know runs or passing route combinations, have to be able to break on the ball."

Collins, in short, always has dreamed big. Sometimes he had to dream, too, to avoid his reality.

His family was forced to relocate when Hurricane Katrina hit in 2005 when Collins was 11 years old. His father recalls "the house was completely washed away" upon returning to New Orleans to survey the damage post-storm.

"It was hard for him to get through it," he recalls. "Because when Katrina hit, the place we were staying at, when we got back it was nothing but a slab left. Half of it was two blocks away and we couldn't find the other half anywhere."

Landon then had to hurdle a different and more public kind of trial in 2012, when he chose Alabama over home state LSU on national TV and his mother, April Justin, sitting by his side, shook her head and would not support his decision. "I feel that LSU's the best place for him to be," she said. "Go Tigers. No. 1."

An ESPN story later quoted Justin saying she was thinking of what was best for Collins after football. Collins said Friday it "didn't bother me," though in the past he has bristled at the notion of being known for that moment. He said as his mother's oldest and first-born, she wanted him closer to home, but acknowledged having left Alabama after his junior season what it would mean one day to graduate.

"Absolutely," Collins said, when asked if he intends to get his degree one day. "I want to do that for her."

His latest and most unfamiliar challenge occurred last season, when Collins played more than 1,100 snaps according to secondary coach David Merritt Sr., but suddenly he was on one of the worst defenses in football, out of position playing free safety because that's where the team needed him.

"It was a big challenge for me," Collins said Thursday. "Not winning, not being that stout defense I always had been a part of, and our defense wasn't making plays - it was just a surprise to me. We needed a lot more game-changers. We needed people who want it and want to go get it."

Merritt credits Collins' personal improvement with his ability to keep his weight down around 215 pounds, a result of kicking a well-documented Oreo habit. Collins credits the defense's all-around improvement with the addition of pricey free agents Janoris Jenkins, Olivier Vernon and Harrison.

"Definitely the money they put into it, that's a big one," Collins said. "It's a big change. Everybody wants to win, they want to be great, they want to be known, and they want to have a fantastic year and definitely want to go get the Super Bowl. You've got animals that want to eat, basically."

If the money is the biggest difference in this year's Giants defense, though, then Landon "Money" Collins is its fearsome face. One final story, as a reminder of who is directing this Giants D from the back:

"At age 7 or 8 he started playing baseball, he had just won the football championship and now he was in the baseball championship game," Tom Collins recalls. "The bases were loaded, he was up to bat. The first pitch was a ball, the second was a strike. Landon just looked at it. The third pitch was a strike. Landon looked. The coach said, 'Timeout!'

"He ran out and came back, and I said, 'What did he say?'" The coach told me: "He said, 'Don't worry, Coach. I got this.' I looked at Landon and said, 'Money, this is what champions are made of. This is your moment.'" Two pitches later, Landon Collins belted a grand slam over the fence.

"That's when he first started getting his fan base," Tom Collins said. "And by age 9 or 10, he was just one of those kids that stood above the rest."

Bobby Hart on bond with Ereck Flowers, grandkid stories, 'love' for New York media | Giants Q + A

By James Kratch

November 24, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD -- Bobby Hart is striving to prove himself the kind of player the Giants have sorely lacked in recent seasons.

General manager Jerry Reese has been criticized for the team's lack of success finding contributing players in the later rounds of the NFL Draft. But the Giants hope Hart, a 2015 seventh-round pick out of Florida State, is on his way to becoming a rare third-day find.

After appearing in nine games as a rookie with one start, Hart has been the Giants' starting right tackle for the last eight games. He stepped in when veteran Marshall Newhouse went down with a calf injury in Week 2 against the Saints, and he has held onto the job since - even after Newhouse returned from injury.

NJ Advance Media caught up with Hart, who had one of his better games Sunday in the Giants' 22-16 win over the Bears, to discuss playing in New York, his relationship with left tackle and fellow Florida native Ereck Flowers, and more. Here's this week's Giants 4 Downs interview:

FIRST DOWN: Every week, it seems, you are going up against a heralded defensive end or linebacker. How do you approach that on a week-in, week-out basis? There's always a big name across from you. Does that fuel you?

BH: "I love that. You see this guy, and everyone's talking about how he's going to affect the game, how you got to watch out for him. And then you get to the game time, and you're the person who's going to stop him from doing that. Each week, you've got a big defensive end, they say this guy is going to wreck the game. And it's just fun, you know. Why would you want it any other way? It's what you play for. For it to be easy? There's no fun in that. You can't tell your grandkids about that. Anyone can do that."

SECOND DOWN: What is your relationship with Ereck like?

BH: "That's my boy, man. We help each other. We're going through the same thing, and two heads are better than one. We bounce things off each other, and try to get better together. Chase greatness. It's always good to have someone to talk to, just as a human. See how they look at things, and stuff like that."

THIRD DOWN: You've been here for a while now. How do you like playing in New York?

BH: "I love New York. I love everything about New York. I love Jersey. I love the atmosphere, I love the city. Everything about the Giants. I love the media, you know, because you know how the media here is. They're going to tell you what they see, how they view it."

"Most of the media, they don't know about football, they don't know about the real Xs and Os. They can just go off on what they see. Did you block your man or did you not? Did you catch the ball or did you not? Did you make the throw or did you not? Did you tackle them or did you not? To me, New York, it brings the simplicity back to the game. You try to play so much Xs and Os; this play was this, and I was supposed to block him this way, and the running back was supposed to go left, and he went right ... did you block your man or did you not? So that's what I like about it."

FOURTH DOWN: Do you carry a chip on your shoulder as a seventh-round pick?

BH: "Of course. I watch film, and I see a lot of the guys that went before me, and it's just like ... But God doesn't make any mistakes. So I just take it day by day, stride by stride. It's not where you start, it's where you finish."

EXTRA POINT NO. 1: What has this experience been like? You've become entrenched as a starter, the team is winning, the playoffs are in the picture ...

BH: "It's felt normal. Every level I've been on, I've been a starter, we've been a good team, made a playoff push. So it feels like what I'm supposed to be doing."

EXTRA POINT NO. 2: When Marshall got healthy, and they kept you in the lineup, what was your reaction?

BH: "I feel like the coaches kept me there, because I feel like I earned it. ... Wally Pipp, that's what was in my mind."

Head Coach Ben McAdoo

November 28, 2016

I'll start with the defensive side of the ball. What I thought we did well, we held them to 13 points. We played good situational football. We had some hits, pressures and sacks on the quarterback. Three forced fumbles and recoveries and the touchdown on defense. What we need to work on, we need to get back to tackling the way we're capable of.

On offense, what we did well, two weeks in a row, we took care of The Duke. It was big in the ballgame. Touchdowns in the green zone and on first and second down, normal down and distance, we won the run 58 percent of the time. What we need to work on, we need to put ourselves in position to score more points. We're not getting that done. We have to be more consistent, detailed and finish better.

On special teams, what we did well, our coverage teams played fast and loud. We challenged them this week and they answered the call. I thought with all the personnel in and out of the ballgame they did a nice job stepping up with all hands on deck. What we need to work on, we need to clean up the bad football; the muff, the penalties and the missed PAT.

As a team, where do we go from here? It's December football. This is where the real football begins. All our hard work to this point has set the table for December. It's an exciting time against a lot of playoff teams and playoff environments. The margin for error is small. This is where our identity needs to take over.

Q: You talk about December football and you're playing playoff-caliber teams to finish off the season. Do you run the risk at all of looking ahead or is it still a week-to-week mentality?

A: We're going to have a week-to-week mentality. I think it's important to address the elephant in the room, so to speak. Everything gets cranked up a notch in December with everyone jockeying for position. We just need to make sure we play our best football moving forward.

Q: What is the elephant in the room in your estimation?

A: All of our hard work up until this point has set the table for us to be playing meaningful football in December, which is what everyone in the league shoots for.

Q: Do you view the running game to be more important in December?

A: December football, everything is important. That's where our identity needs to take place.

Q: Do you know what that identity is yet?

A: Sound, smart and tough, committed to discipline and poise. I know you love writing about it.

Q: Have you seen enough of that to feel confident that it is heading in the right direction as we head to this home stretch?

A: Absolutely. Fundamentals, we're getting better. We've been playing smarter football. Been playing tough and hanging in there mentally and physically. Playing tough. Committed to discipline and poise, absolutely.

Q: You have a lot of young players that haven't been through meaningful December football. How do you express to them what to be ready for?

A: We're going to rely on our veterans to lead. It's important this time of year that the players spend time together. Spend more time together talking about their football and getting our football right. We need to be mentally dialed-in on our preparation. It starts way before game day.

Q: What are you happiest with in regards to where the defense is?

A: I think the most important stat for a defense is points. If we hold a team to 13 points like we did yesterday, that's a great place to start. I think situational football is improving. Affecting the quarterback is something that is improving. It was nice to see us get some fumbles yesterday, recovered and score on defense, too. The situational football is important, points are obviously important and disrupting the quarterback because we're going to see some good ones coming up.

The situational football is important, points are obviously important and disrupting the quarterback because we're going to see some good ones coming up.

Q: When you look at your offense yesterday, are you okay with Sterling Shepard not being targeted in the pass game?

A: We would like to see all of our players touch the ball.

Q: Why do you think it turned out that way?

A: It was a combination of a lot of different things. It's unfortunate that that's the way the game went. (He) actually had a nice carry there in the fourth quarter to get us in scoring range. We have some things from an offensive perspective that when you see the type of coverages we did yesterday, you would like to get the ball in his hands.

Q: Obviously you have considered the risk and reward of having Odell on punt return. Is that a tough choice for a coach? Returning punts is a pretty difficult and physical challenge. Do you want to see Odell do that more or less here?

A: We'll take a look at it and talk through it in the game plan meetings this week.

Q: Is Sterling not having any catches just a function of your offense? It feels like we have had times this season talking about Victor not having any targets or Odell and now Sterling, is that the way it's going to work some weeks?

A: No. We're not completing enough balls or moving the chains as much as we need to move the chains for everyone to get involved. Our details and consistency needs to improve. Everyone wants touches. We need to get better and finish better.

Q: The decision with Odell as a punt returner, how do you balance that being that he was so successful?

A: We will get to that when we talk through our game plan meetings. That's not something I'm going to be talking about with all of you.

Q: Do you find that punt returners are at a greater risk for injury?

A: I think every play that they're out there on the field is a risk.

Q: Your players seemed harder on themselves after a game like yesterday than you seemed to be on them. Would you agree with that and is there a reason for that? They were totally unsatisfied with yesterday's win and how they played. How do you explain that?

A: We have a good locker room. We have a high character locker room. They hold each other accountable. As a coach, you really appreciate that.

Q: Is Shane Vereen going to practice with you this week?

A: We will wait and see. We will take a look at that.

Q: When you say a high character locker room and appreciating that as a head coach, did you mean that they will correct and hold themselves accountable for mistakes so you don't have to necessarily focus on that part of it as much?

A: I have the pulse of the locker room. It's important for me to be consistent with the way you grade film and the games. You talk about what you did well and what you need to work on. You address where we need to go from there to be successful and to get better and improve. I need to be consistent week in and week out with the way we evaluate games.

Q: Any updates on the injured guys? Justin Pugh, Mark Herzlich, Nat Berhe?

A: Nat and Mark are in the protocol. Pugh did some rehab work today. It's too early to tell there.

Q: Do you expect Marshall Newhouse or Brett Jones to practice this week?

A: Again, it's too early to tell. Wednesday is an eternity away.

Q: Eli Manning has hit some deep balls but he's also had some misses on plays where receivers do have separation. What do you attribute that lack of accuracy?

A: It's a combination of everything, really. Obviously he has some throws that he'd like to have back, so our accuracy needs to get better. The protection was good at times and not so good at times. The details on the perimeter need to take shape.

Q: Some of the players talked yesterday in the locker room about the idea that you're fortunate to have players that can make big plays that change the game but you're waiting for the collective performance that will be able to carry you through the entire game. Do you believe as a coach that when you have players that make those big plays that that can sustain success in December and beyond or do you need more collectively as a team?

A: I think it's great that we have players that can change the game in one play. We need to be mentally dialed-in to play a complete game at all three phases for four-plus quarters. We really need to cash in on that in December.

Q: Do you feel that the running game is still making progress or did they take a half-step back?

A: I believe in a normal down and distance we made some progress there. We're not where we want to be yet. We're going to keep working our way through it. Again, it's not just the offensive line. It's the tight ends, receivers, the backs. Everyone is included. We all need to take steps to get better.

THE McADOO REPORT

The McAdoo Report Week 1

The McAdoo Report

By Michael Eisen

September 9, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, Giants.com's exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: It's clearly important for any coach to have his team prepared for the opening game. When the opening game is a division road game, is the importance and significance of that heightened even more?

McAdoo: "No. You have to be ready to go no matter who you play or who you start off with. It's one of 16. It's important. You're only guaranteed 16 of them, but we do understand division games are worth two."

Q: How much have you discussed the importance of playing your first game on the road against one of your chief rivals?

McAdoo: "We've talked about it. Obviously, playing in this rivalry with the tradition on both sides is an important game. You really don't have to say too much to them the first game out. There's going to be a lot of energy, a lot of juice. I expect they'll be like me, champing at the bit."

Q: When you were a position coach and a coordinator, did you have a sense going into an opener how your unit was going to play? And now as a head coach, do you have a sense how your team will play Sunday?

McAdoo: "We feel like we built this team up to be a physical, heavy-handed, well-conditioned, confident football team. We'll figure out what we look like on Sunday. We expect a great effort from both teams. We're excited to see how it plays out."

Q: As a coach, do you go over in your mind how you expect the game to play out?

McAdoo: "Yes. You always visualize as many possible scenarios as you can. Whether you come out and it's a close game, a back-and-forth game, whether it's a game where you fall behind early or whether it's a game you come out and jump ahead early. I think you have to visualize all three scenarios. Every game, regardless of the scenario, has a path to victory. It's up to us to find that path."

Q: As a coordinator, you watched the opposing defense. Do you now also take time to watch the tape of the opposing special teams and the offense?

McAdoo: "Yes, absolutely. You have to take time. Make sure you're on top of the special teams, on top of what they're doing from an offensive perspective. What is natural for me is spending time with the offense, and being on top of what they're doing defensively."

Q: Do you still spend most of your time with the offense?

McAdoo: "I budget my time."

Q: I know that you're very good at removing the emotion from things. But Sunday is a big day in your life, your first regular-season game as an NFL head coach. Are you going to be able to take the emotion out of it because you're good at doing that, or because you have to do that?

McAdoo: "I think you are who you are. I'm comfortable in my own skin. I'm not going to let emotion get in the way of what my job is. I'm going to attack the job."

Q: This week, all 53 players on the active roster practiced. When that happens, do you have to decide early in the week which players will be inactive, because you have to know who will play on the special teams, or do you let the players practice and decide late in the week?

McAdoo: "You go in and you identify who's competing to get up. You just let practice unfold. Thursday's full-pads practice will tell us a lot about who's going to be up and down in the game. You want competition at practice. I'll never forget in 2010 in Green Bay. We were never healthy all year. Finally, we get to the Super Bowl practice and we had 53 guys healthy, plus the practice squad. We go down and they're competing to get up. We had some pretty good knock-down, drag-outs down there in the Super Bowl week practices with pads on. To me, those are the best types of practices; you have guys competing to get a suit on game day."

Q: Are you going to have season captains or weekly captains?

McAdoo: "We're going to have both. We voted on team captains for offense, defense and special teams. Then we'll have three captains each week to go out there with them. We'll have six total."

Q: Can you say who the season-long captains are?

McAdoo: "Yes, we announced it to the team: Eli (Manning), Zak (DeOssie) and J.C. (Jonathan Casillas)."

Q: When you arrived here two years ago as coordinator, Victor Cruz was a star and Odell Beckham Jr. was soon to be drafted. I imagine you were thinking of the plays you could call with both of them pened for about 60 snaps. Can you see your plan coming to fruition?

McAdoo: "The offense has really taken shape schematically and with the personnel. It's exciting to be able to go down to Dallas with all your pieces in place. I'm excited."

Q: You had mentioned at the NFL meeting that you were going to have a game management team. What is the gist of that?

McAdoo: "We put time in all offseason and training camp getting ready for it. We've been practicing situations daily in camp, and once a week when we got into the in-season prep. We'll have conversations throughout the week and then we'll have our game management meeting on Saturday mornings."

Q: When you were asked about the Cowboys offense, you said, it didn't matter who the skill guys are because everything revolves around their offensive line. Is that unusual?

McAdoo: "They're a little bit of a throwback team. It's like that on both sides of the ball for them. It always starts up front with the O and D lines. That's a credit to them. They do a nice job up front."

Q: With all the attention on Dak Prescott, it seems Jason Witten hasn't received as much attention as he normally does. This team certainly knows Jason Witten well. I know you've played him many times. Talk about Jason Witten.

McAdoo: "I have played him many times. I had the chance to coach him in the Pro Bowl one year. He works at it. Everything is important. He doesn't let anything slide through the cracks, even at the Pro Bowl. Just very smart, aware. Doesn't waste any movement on the field. He knows what's coming and knows how to beat it. The chemistry with the quarterbacks, especially with Romo, is tremendous. It's hard to find that. You go back and think of (Joe) Montana and (Jerry) Rice, and some of the great chemistry with the quarterback and receiver or tight end. That has to be one of the best that's ever existed."

Q: (Linebacker) Sean Lee is Dallas' best defender. What do you see when you watch him on tape?

McAdoo: "It's like he plays with a little bit of a head start. You can tell he has good instincts and studies film. He has good ball skills, so we always have to know where he is."

Q: Dallas' kicker, Dan Bailey, has made more than 90 percent of his career field goal attempts. Do you have to keep that kind of accuracy in mind when you're making a decision on the sidelines?

McAdoo: "I think everything factors. He hasn't done much kicking in the preseason but, obviously, the history is there."

The McAdoo Report Week 2

The McAdoo Report
By Michael Eisen
September 16, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. - The McAdoo Report, Giants.com's exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: It's sometimes said that the first job of a head coach is to manage the game. Last week in Dallas, you called plays and made the decisions a head coach has to make. How do you think it went?

McAdoo: "I don't think 'game manager' is a term I'm comfortable with. I think more of it is a game dictator. I think you want to dictate the way you want the game to go, as opposed to managing the game. I thought our communication and the way the game went was clean. Everything was efficient. There were no question marks or open ends. Everything worked like clockwork."

Q: In your experience, is this the week where a lot of details – offense, defense, communication among the coaches – are cleaned up?

McAdoo: "Yes. From Week 1 to Week 2 in the preseason, there's a big jump that takes place. From Week 1 to Week 2 in the regular season, the same thing happens. A lot of these players played a significant amount of plays for the first time. I think once we got our eyes on the film, we got some things corrected. The way we're working this week, we need to take a big jump."

Q: Your offensive line has received much scrutiny and criticism. Do you think it responded pretty well last week, particularly in the four-minute offense? You got two first downs and you almost had a third to clinch the game.

McAdoo: "I think there's a lot of noise about our offensive line out there. I'm confident in those guys. When you go back the last five weeks in regular season games, Rashad Jennings is the leading rusher in the league. He has the most 10-yard runs in the league, 10 yards or more. I'm confident in those guys. I thought they did a nice job protecting in the game. They have some things to work on and get better at. That's why we practice."

Q: Your time of possession (23:17) wasn't great. Dallas ran a lot more plays (75-54) than you did. Do those types of things concern you, or do you look at it that you moved the ball and won the game?

McAdoo: "Time of possession is important. We want to control the ball and we want more plays as an offensive unit. It's harder to speed teams up than it is to slow them down. That's our challenge. We need to get off the field on third downs on defense. Offense needs to move the chains on third down and be more efficient on first and second down. We cannot turn the ball over."

Q: When you said you were going to have a full-back by committee, I don't think anyone thought Brett Jones was going to be the guy. What did you see in him that makes you think he'd be good for that role?

McAdoo: "Well, he's an offensive lineman, so we know he spends a lot of time blocking. He's built low to the ground. He's a center, so he has a stature that would fit the position most."

Q: Regarding the game-winning touchdown to Victor Cruz, Eli Manning said that Cruz "might get a minus on the actual route, because he did something he wasn't supposed to do." I would imagine that happens all the time - a player has to improvise to make a play. What is your philosophy about that? He scored the winning touchdown, but he didn't exactly do what his assignment called for.

McAdoo: "When I saw the ball snapped, I was getting my fourth-down call ready. I didn't think we were going to have a great play. It's an example of players going above and beyond the X's and O's. He didn't have a window to sit down, so he created his own window, a second window. He did a great job."

Q: So you're fine with it?

McAdoo: "Like I said, I was getting my fourth-down call ready. I didn't think we were going to have anywhere to go with it. It was a version of an extended play. It wasn't him making his own play up. It's not like he was being insubordinate in any way, shape or form. He was playing the play as an extended play. It shows the chemistry that Eli and Victor have together, even though they haven't played together the last couple of years. That stuff has some carry over."

Q: Dallas converted 10 third down opportunities. You had neither a sack nor a takeaway, which statistically usually results in a loss. Do you look at those as areas of potential improvement?

McAdoo: "Yes. Dallas played clean football. They protected the quarterback well. We got some rushes in the second half on him, JPP (Jason Pierre-Paul), in particular. They played clean, they used the clock. They were very methodical in their approach. I'm encouraged with the defense playing with poise, being comfortable and uncomfortable. That's a big part of it. They gave up some yards, but they played the full 60 minutes and no one panicked. They just trusted their technique, trusted the

Q: You go from playing a quarterback (Dak Prescott) with zero career starts to one (Drew Brees) with 217 career starts, the highest total among active players. Does the mindset have to change at all as a defense since you're playing such an experienced, accomplished quarterback?

McAdoo: "We need to play with poise again. The focus this week is really on the communication and our details in being precise on everything we do. When you're playing a future Hall of Famer at the position, it makes it a challenge. We're excited to play him on our own turf. As long as we play with discipline and poise like we're capable of and we've shown, we're very confident."

Q: You've worked with some great quarterbacks. You've played against Brees. Why does he stand out in your opinion?

McAdoo: "I think when I go back to all the times we've matched up against Drew, it's just the competitive nature. Just the competitive spirit. In Green Bay, Drew and Aaron (Rodgers) had some battles, some good battles. The battle with Drew and Eli last year was a tremendous battle. I think he's a competitor at the end of the day. You can talk about him as a natural passer, a cerebral guy that has good instincts. He has rhythm in his body and can make all the throws and all those types of things. The competitive spirit is also what drives him."

Q: The Saints have led the NFL in third-down conversion percentage four of the last six years. What do they do on third down that makes them so good?

McAdoo: "Drew is one of those guys that has a natural instinct on where to go with the ball. That helps. They do a nice job with their skill players as far as distributing them. They have guys that are all shapes and sizes. They have always been that way. They can play really a man game and a zone game. They can play a pressure game and have success. They have the pieces to do that."

Q: Their defense looks like a good baseball team, strong up the middle with (tackle) Nick Fairley, (middle linebacker James) Laurinaitis and the two safeties (Kenny Vaccaro and Jairus Byrd). How has Laurinaitis fit in?

McAdoo: "He's kind of the glue, I think. He's a guy that does a lot of the communication that pulls everything together for them. (End Cameron) Jordan is a guy that is a very talented player, as well. He's a guy that can wreck a game and destroy a game. We have to make sure we're aware of where he is. He'll line up in multiple spots. Byrd's a guy that has a pretty good nose for the football."

Q: Their coverage teams stand out.

McAdoo: "Their coverage teams have a variety of players that have good speed. They have good physicality and they're aggressive that way. They'll also take some chances, which may slow some teams down a little bit and give them more of an advantage with their skill sets. Teams are playing a little bit slower and making sure they don't have any gadgets pulling on them."

The McAdoo Report Week 3

The McAdoo Report
By Michael Eisen
September 23, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, an exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: Washington is coming here this week with an 0-2 record. Do you have to be mindful that you are playing a desperate opponent, and convey that to your team?

McAdoo: "Yes. We talked about it. It's a division game, a rivalry game. It's worth two games itself. We need to prepare for a good team, a hungry team. They're hungry animals. We have to be ready to go."

Q: A week ago, we talked about how explosive the Saints' offense is. Then you went and held them to one touchdown and less than 300 yards. As you looked at the tape, what were some of the keys to the defensive performance?

McAdoo: "I thought we were physical and heavy-handed up front. I thought we challenged them on everything they wanted to do, whether it was in the run game, receivers coming off the line of scrimmage or tight ends coming off the line of scrimmage. We challenged them and we were physical. We didn't give them anything easy."

Q: You went for a touchdown on fourth down on the 3-yard line in the first quarter. Of course, your immediate goal was to score points, but there were also long-term ramifications — indicating to your players your confidence in them, showing them you're going to be aggressive. Was that part of your thinking as well?

McAdoo: "Yes. I'm confident in our green zone offense. I'm confident in the players. We're an attacking style. We have confidence in our special teams and defense, too, to hold them. We have a chance inside the 5-yard line to be aggressive, we're going to do that."

Q: You won the coin toss and deferred, taking the ball to the second half. Deferring has become more popular around the league. The Giants' record had been poor when deferring. Is that decision going to be a game-by-game decision?

McAdoo: "Yes. Multiple things factor into that decision. It shows confidence in your defense that you want to kick the ball away, go out and get a stop right away."

Q: After losing three fumbles last week, have you spent more time on ball security in practice this week?

McAdoo: "We emphasize ball security each and every week. We're not going to overreact to one week and panic. We're going to emphasize it more. The players took that among themselves to emphasize it more. As coaches, we made sure we hammered the points home."

Q: In the same vein, when you have a player who fumbles the ball or drops a pass, I'm sure it doesn't affect you long-term as a play-caller. But what about the short-term? Do you need a cornerback's mentality, quickly forget about it and move on to the next play?

McAdoo: "To me, you want to get them the ball as soon as you can afterwards. I think great players, professional players, the sooner you can get the ball back in their hands, the sooner everyone can move on."

Q: This week, Marshall Newhouse hasn't practiced because of a calf injury. If he can't play, either Bobby Hart or Will Beatty will take his place. Does the way you structure your practice week, with a long, full-pads practice on Thursday, help you make a more informed decision regarding a potential replacement lineman?

McAdoo: "Absolutely. It gives him more time to recover more on Wednesday. You really have the whole plan in on Thursday, so they have a chance to go out there and work all the situations, the run game, third downs, as well as one-on-one with the pads on. It gives you the chance to make a well-informed decision."

Q: Much of your news conference (Wednesday) was devoted to current events and issues outside of football. Throughout your career, have you tried to be more than just a football coach to your players? Also a life coach and a mentor regarding larger issues in society?

McAdoo: "Yes, but it's a little different for me. I've never been that much older than the players I've coached. I don't know if it's more like being a big brother, uncle or whatever it may be. I think coaching, teaching, leadership and parenting are all wrapped into one in what we get to do for a living. I try to make myself available for players for whatever they may need. If it's off-the-field, I certainly feel that that is important."

McAdoo: "They have a variety of playmakers. They have a lot of weapons on the outside, (DeSean) Jackson being one of them. (Pierre) Garcon is one, Jordan Reed can really change the game. He's a tight end, a yards after catch guy as well as a down the field threat. You don't normally find that at that position. They have some backs that can factor into the pass game as well. Matt Jones is a big, physical runner. They have the guards and tackles, and they run, block and protect. Their center (Kory Lichtensteiger) does a nice job directing traffic so (quarterback) Kirk (Cousins) can just go play."

Q: Is Jordan Reed as good a receiving tight end as there is in the NFL?

McAdoo: "He's one of the top guys we have in the league now. Everyone has their own game. He has a little bit of a basketball-type feel for it underneath. He can definitely go make the long ball play."

McAdoo: "They use a lot of 4-man front in their nickel. They use a lot of personnel. They won't just play base and nickel. They'll show some dime in there, show some little base and play (rookie Su'a) Cravens in there at one of the linebacker spots. They have a variety of packages they use to get all their players involved in the game plan."

Q: How formidable are Ryan Kerrigan, Trent Murphy, Chris Baker and Preston Smith up front?

McAdoo: "They're all tremendous pass rushers. Smith and Murphy are definitely up and coming."

Q: He has received attention for other reasons, but Josh Norman is a pretty good cornerback, is he not?

McAdoo: "Absolutely. He's a shutdown corner. He's a premier corner in this league. That factors into some of the decision-making by the quarterback."

Q: Have they upgraded their coverage teams with David Bruton, Terence Garvin and Cravens?

McAdoo: "No question. They have a lot of DB's that are active in the game. Their coverage teams have a ton of speed out there. They'll be a tough matchup for us, but we'll be prepared."

The McAdoo Report Week 4

By Michael Eisen
New York Giants
October 1, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, Giants.com's exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: It's always interesting to see how a team reacts to its first loss, particularly when the defeats follows one or more victories. You're going to Minnesota to face an undefeated team, you're playing in a dome, and you have injury issues. Coaches like to say no game is bigger than any other game, but with everything going on, is this a big week for your team?

McAdoo: "It's a big week just like last week and just like next week. We take them one at a time. It's one of 16, but it's an opportunity to get back on the field. We're looking to get back on the field as quickly as we can. Having a long week is good and bad for a variety of reasons. We're excited to get back on the field. Guys responded well to our Wednesday practice. We had a lot of great energy and effort out of practice. Looking forward to cleaning up the execution as the week goes on."

Q: You have a lot on your plate this week, including waiting to see how your players will react to the factors we listed before.

McAdoo: "It's another football game. We need to focus on what we can control. There is some drama out there, but we can't get trapped in the drama. That's not something that's important to the game. It's a tough environment to play in. They're going to have blowups, mascots, motorcycles, noise and all kinds of stuff. We're not going to get caught up in that. We have to play our game."

Q: A lot of coaches say that the pain of a loss lingers longer than the joy of a victory. Is that true for you?

McAdoo: "I disagree. I think it's important that as a team, together, you flush the last game always and move on together. Whether it's a win or a loss, you have to learn from it. You either came out on top or you ran out of time. You have to move on and learn lessons from the game. Push forward. We're looking for consistency in the way we prepare and positivity."

Q: You said the other day that you don't get frustrated. As an offensive coach, when you look at your seven turnovers and minus-six differential, what do you think?

McAdoo: "I don't like where we are there. I do feel that when you take a look at percentage of explosive plays, we're number one in the league offense and defense combined, the way we calculate. We've been explosive and we've been limiting teams' explosives. That's important for us. Now we just have to finish better. That's a big part of what we're emphasizing. You can't panic. You have to hammer home the fundamentals. We can't go through the motions. We have confidence that our training will take over at some point here."

Q: Is taking care of the ball something you try and hammer home every day?

McAdoo: "Always. Always and forever. The game is about The Duke. It's my job as a coach to make sure the players know that and understand it. It has to be important to them, as well as the rest of the fundamentals in the game."

Q: On the other side, you have yet to intercept a pass. You did recover a fumble (on a muffed punt return) against Washington. Do you think that eventually is going to start coming around, and you're going to start taking the ball away from people?

McAdoo: "Yes. Takeaways, they show up in bunches usually. We just have to make sure we take away the ones that are there. We can't go rouge out there. We can't panic and have everyone doing their own thing. Great defense and special teams coverage units, they fit together like nuts and bolts. They have to fit together tightly. When you start to chase turnovers, it can leave gaps. We don't want any gaps."

Q: Injuries have forced you to use new players and for others to take on new roles in the secondary. How important has Landon Collins been as a steady presence back there?

McAdoo: "I think Landon and Jackrabbit (Janoris Jenkins) have both been very important to everything. Having a safety who's been in there and has been a stable part of what we're doing, and a young player who's really growing and maturing at a fast rate, it says a lot about Landon and the work he puts into it. Jackrabbit has been stable out there as well. He's a guy that's come in, and he really competes hard. That part of things is important, too, and it rubs off on the other players."

Q: You've played three very close games. Most games in the NFL are decided by less than two touchdowns. Do you think playing these types of games will be beneficial down the road, or are they only beneficial if you win them?

McAdoo: "The pain of discipline versus the pain of regret. The first two weeks we showed the pain of discipline. Last week, the pain of regret showed up. We have to make good and healthy to be in close football games. That's usually what the big ones come down to."

Q: You've said a couple times when you lose guys that you were going to fill the spot by committee. Now, Shane Vereen, who did so many things, is sidelined indefinitely. Do you think the running backs you have now can form the committee that steps in to do what Shane did?

McAdoo: "Yes, absolutely. 'By committee' is a good way to say, 'I'm not giving you an answer.' That's another way I'm going with it. We believe that all the backs have a skillset that can help us win. All the skillsets are a little bit different, which is okay. I think it's hard for the defense to defend that. At the same point in time, we have confidence in all of our backs to take care of what Shane brought to the table."

Q: You used (center) Brett Jones as fullback. Could he be a third down back?

McAdoo: "Never say never. He knows the protections."

Q: Part of what makes Odell Beckham Jr. so great is that he plays the game with so much passion and enthusiasm. As a coach, do you walk a tight-rope between wanting to see him display that and not becoming, as you said, "a distraction?"

McAdoo: "I love Odell's work ethic. I love his passion for the game. It's important to him. His teammates are important to him. I just want to make sure that when our best is needed that we're all at our best. That's my primary objective in the whole deal. When our best is needed, the players and the coaches are all at their best. And it usually comes down to the end."

Q: You visited the Metrodome many times as an assistant with the Packers. It was a noise factory. The new stadium is just as loud, if not louder. What's the key to an offense going into an environment like that and performing at a high level?

McAdoo: "The biggest key to the football game is that when the ball is snapped, everyone is moving on offense. Period. That's the biggest key. When the ball is snapped, everyone on offense is moving. Write that one down."

Q: Is your experience that sometimes that doesn't happen because of the noise?

McAdoo: "It's a lot easier said than done. You have to work it and train the snap count like it's its own scheme and its own play."

Q: The Vikings defense has a star at every level –

Everson Griffen on the line, Anthony Bahr at linebacker, and Harrison Smith in the secondary. Does that make it harder for you as an offensive team?

McAdoo: "No question. They have young, talented players that have developed at all three levels. They also have smart veteran leaders at all three levels that helped bring those players up. I think that's an important part of the way they do things. It shows on film."

Q: They have 15 sacks, three more than anyone else in the league at this point. What makes them so good at pressuring the quarterback?

McAdoo: "Everything is tied together. You can't just give their front credit. It's their front four in combination with the linebackers. The way they rush. Then the secondary ties into everything that they do. They play well together and on time together. They know you're going to have to get the ball out in a hurry. Their secondary fits in accordingly."

Q: You have experience preparing quarterbacks on the fly. In 2013, when you were the quarterbacks coach in Green Bay, you got Scott Tolzien ready to start a game here against the Giants. To see how Sam Bradford has come in and played at a high level so quickly, I would imagine you admire that.

McAdoo: "I have a lot of admiration for Sam anyway. Based on the things that he's been through and being able to come back and do what he's been able to do in this league. Now to be able to do it again and jump in on a completely new system says a lot about him. Just going through what we went through in Green Bay, bringing Scott Tolzien in and how fast those things can happen. The time and energy. The late nights and the early mornings. The stress that goes into it and the teaching and learning that goes into it. It's admirable."

Q: Has Stefon Diggs really come into his own as a scary receiver?

McAdoo: "Yes. Very good, very talented. He works hard and has a flare for the dramatic. The ball seems to find him. We'll have our hands full there. He's a good player."

Q: Cordarrelle Patterson, is he a lump-in-your-throat kickoff returner?

McAdoo: "He and (Marcus) Sherels are guys who have a lot of experience. When they get the ball in their hands, they can be explosive and dynamic. It shows up on tape. They have 11 special teams touchdowns in the last five years. They have a history of putting up some good things on special teams."

The McAdoo Report Week 5

The McAdoo Report

By Michael Eisen

October 7, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, an exclusive weekly interview with Giants head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: Two weeks ago when the Redskins came in and they were 0-2, I asked you if they were a desperate team. The Giants have lost two in a row. Are you a desperate team?

McAdoo: "I think we're a hungry team. We're not a desperate team. This (the Giants' game Sunday night in Green Bay) is one of 16, but a big one."

Q: You had said last week that there were good and bad aspects of having a longer week to prepare. Now you have a shorter week. Are there good and bad aspects to a short week?

McAdoo: "Absolutely. Good things and bad things."

Q: What are some of the good things in the short week?

McAdoo: "Well, coming off of a loss,, it's good to get back out on the field quickly. You get a chance to dive right into the next opponent. Put a plan together that's very clean and you can go out and do it quickly. Players can play fast and not overthink."

Q: Justin Pugh said you delivered an inspiring speech to the team (Wednesday). After two losses, how important is it for the players to hear their coach give them a positive message?

McAdoo: "I think it's important that they know I have confidence in the locker room and in the players. It was a tough game the other night against a good opponent (the Minnesota Vikings, who beat the Giants, 24-10). We're a good team. I like where this team is going. We need to rally the troops, so to speak. Get everyone pulling in the same direction and move on to the next one."

Q: You're the most important voice here, but you do have a lot of young players. Do you also rely on the veterans to speak up and help out in that regard?

McAdoo: "I think leadership can come from all age groups. I think we have some young players who can lead. The veteran players are usually more outspoken. As the season goes on, I think you'll start to see some young players come to the front a little bit more."

Q: You were asked yesterday about being sixth in the NFL in yards per game, but 27th in scoring. What does that indicate to you? That you're not taking advantage of the opportunities? That you're moving the ball, but not finishing as you should?

McAdoo: "Yes. We're moving the ball. We're pretty good at getting that first first down and starting to be productive as an offense. What you're seeing is a byproduct of the turnovers, a byproduct of making contested plays, and a byproduct of field position, when we have a long way to go to get the end result. The penalties also factor in there as well. When teams force you to go the long way, you need to be consistent, committed to discipline and poise. You can only take what they give you. That's really the bottom line."

Q: It's been mentioned several times that the defense has no takeaways. Without them, you don't get the benefit of a short field. Only one of your possessions has started in the opponent's territory. Is that a byproduct of not being able to get a takeaway?

McAdoo: "Yes. When you take a look at last season, we were scoring more points at that point in time. Not to say that can't change or won't change, but we were getting a lot of turnovers. I think our offense this year is a better offense. We're not putting up the points that we need to score, but we're also turning the ball over, getting too many penalties and the field is longer. All three things make it hard."

Q: When you talk to the defensive players about takeaways, is it still important to stress that you want them, but you don't want your players going beyond their assignment to try to get them?

McAdoo: "The takeaways are going to come. We need to keep playing sound, smart and tough defense. Great defense fits together like nuts and bolts. When you have players starting to go rogue, trying to get turnovers and seeing things that aren't there, trying to be their own player or man instead of fitting in the scheme of what they're asked to do and doing their job, that's when you start giving up big plays."

Q: Your time of possession in three games has been under 27 minutes. Is time of possession an important statistic to you?

McAdoo: "I think it's a team stat more than it is an offensive stat. I think a lot of that is intertwined. You're running the ball; it's stopping the run. It's also completing the ball at a high percentage. When you don't complete the ball at a high percentage, it's hard to hold onto the ball."

Q: We've heard a lot this week about Odell (Beckham, Jr.). The salient numbers are three and 23, his receptions and yards in Minnesota. The three wide receivers (including Victor Cruz and Sterling Shepard) averaged 8.6 yards per catch. Do those numbers have to go up for the offense to run as efficiently as it should?

McAdoo: "The overall season numbers don't look that way for that group. What you find is they (the opposition) are going to make us go a long way. If that's the case, we need to complete the ball at a high percentage. Once you complete the ball at a high percentage and run the ball better, you get them out of those coverages and have a chance to throw the ball down the field more."

Q: The Minnesota game was the first without your top two running backs, Rashad (Jennings) and Shane (Vereen). How did Orleans Darkwa, Bobby Rainey and Paul Perkins respond?

McAdoo: "I think they responded well. We have confidence in that room from top to bottom. That's a good room for us."

Q: It looks like Darkwa runs hard every time he gets the ball. Is that an accurate statement?

McAdoo: "I think he's a talented back. I think he has good instincts on where the ball fits based on what the defense is doing. Sometimes, it's hard to teach that. He always runs with a nice forward lean."

Q: Perkins caught a short pass and turned it into a 67-yard gain. Was that just him making a big play?

McAdoo: "I think you have to give credit to the offensive line, for them getting out on the perimeter and throwing some nice blocks on the play and springing him. It shows his bounce. He has very good bounce and very good patience for a young back. That's hard to find. He did a nice job protecting the ball. Next time he has to score."

Q: You sometimes say about a young player, "The game's not too big for him." Andrew Adams started for the first time at safety in Minnesota. I doubt he played in front of a lot of crowds at UConn like we saw the other night. How did he hold up?

McAdoo: "The game is not too big for Andrew. He's a guy that it's in his DNA. Sometimes you can see that when players walk through the door. He's a very confident and well-prepared young player."

Q: When we play in Green Bay Sunday night, you will be coaching for the first time against one of your mentors, Mike McCarthy, who is your friend and someone who means a lot to you. McCarthy said on his conference call that he looks forward to seeing you before the game. You don't impress me as the kind of coach that likes to schmooze before the game with the opposing coach. Would you make an exception for a mentor and a friend?

McAdoo: "I look forward to seeing Mike and talking to Mike. It's been a while. I'm not a big schmoozer by any stretch of the imagination. He and I go back a long way."

Q: You downplayed your return to Green Bay. You did spend eight years of your life there. You got married there and your children were born there. Wouldn't it be natural to walk into Lambeau Field and feel a little nostalgic or reminisce a little bit?

McAdoo: "They made some changes. I look forward to seeing some of the changes that they've made. I have a job to do. There may be some feelings, but I have to focus on my job and putting this team in the best position to win the game."

Q: You spent a lot of time in Lambeau. As an NFL guy, do you think Lambeau is a special place?

McAdoo: "I think it is. I think it's kind of like a college atmosphere. A university atmosphere in a pro league. That's tough to find. There are only a handful of mom and pop franchises left in this league. The Giants are one of them. They're hard to find. It's a different atmosphere. It's like a college atmosphere even in the locker room. The players all live relatively close to one another. It's just the size of the community. You can get anywhere in about seven minutes there. Seven to 15 minutes. But it creates a close-knit locker room. It has its advantages. When you walk into Lambeau, it's similar to walking into the stadium in South Bend."

Q: The Packers have a collection of skill players – Aaron Rodgers, Jordy Nelson, Eddie Lacy, Randall Cobb – who have with a history of producing. How good is this group?

McAdoo: "They are very good. With Jordy back, they're firing on all cylinders in the receiving room. They have a good group of young receivers there that are developing as well. Randall is always dangerous in the slot. They can bring him out of the backfield, too. You definitely don't want to let Lacy and (James) Starks get rolling downhill. They are two big backs and a nice one-two punch."

Q: I've heard so much about Aaron Rodgers being a master of the hard count. I'm sure you helped teach him that.

McAdoo: "I learned it from him."

Q: Even if he's not drawing you offside, does he affect the defensive linemen, because they must he's trying to do just that?

McAdoo: "Yes. Our defensive front has to play with earmuffs. That's an important part of things. He uses the count to get the defense to tip their hand. He's very good at it. He finds the young player on the defensive side of the ball. He can get them to give him information based on the coverages that are being played. He's great at the game within the game. When you're in a system as long as he's been in a system, you can really focus your preparation on that in the one-on-one matchups. Not just taking advantage of scheme and learning what you're going against or studying what you're doing; you have a pretty good idea of what the game plan is going to be going into the game based on your history of the system."

Q: Their run defense numbers really jump out. They're the best in the league so far. Do you credit that to the young players they have up front?

McAdoo: "I think it's a combination. (Defensive coordinator) Dom (Capers) does a great job. Mike Trgovac, their defensive line coach, does a tremendous job there. They've always been good against the run. That's their number one focus each and every week. The players buy into it. They teach the techniques. Fundamentally, the players carry them over from practice into the game. (Tackle) Mike Daniels is playing at a high level. That helps them there. He's a buzzsaw for them. They have some good players in that front five in their base defense and the front four in the nickel defense."

Q: What does Clay Matthews mean to the defense?

McAdoo: "Odell brings energy to our offense. Clay brings energy to that defense in a similar fashion. Just the relentless energy, pursuit and effort level that he plays with. It raises everyone else's game around him."

Q: It seems that every team that you play has outstanding coverage guys on special teams. The Packers have Chris Banjo and Jeff Janis (who combined for 36 special teams tackles last season). When you look at special teams tape, do they jump out at you?

McAdoo: "Yes. They have some outside linebackers that can contribute there as well. Banjo was there when I was there (2006-13). He was a young player working to get on the 53. It's nice to see it pay off for him. The bottom half of their roster is really loaded with linebackers and secondary players that can run, be explosive and are combative. That helps."

The McAdoo Report Week 6

The McAdoo Report

By Michael Eisen

October 14, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, an exclusive weekly interview with Giants head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: The players are obviously disappointed after losing three straight games. As a head coach preparing for the next game (Sunday vs. Baltimore), is it more important what you do strategically or emotionally?

McAdoo: "I think we need to be consistently positive with the way we approach things. Obviously, scheme factors, fundamentals factor coming off a couple of road games that have been prime time games. We have to be smart in what we ask these guys to do this week. It's always great to have positive energy in the building. I think that's the way we operate."

Q: You haven't run the ball as well as you would have liked the last couple of weeks. Some coaches will say it's important to keep running the ball, even if you're not gaining a lot of yards. Are you a proponent of sticking with the ground game?

McAdoo: "Over the last couple of weeks, you may not think so, but I am. We need attempts. I need to do a better job staying committed to the run. I believe in our run game. I believe we're making strides upfront and our backs are making progress. We need to stick with it and continue to chip away so we're in a position to win the battle of the hitting game in the fourth quarter."

Q: How intertwined in your opinion is the run and the pass? Does not passing well have a lot to do with not running well?

McAdoo: "Good offense is synergy. I think everything is connected. You need completions on first and second downs. You need to be able to run the ball on first and second downs so you can have balance. A lot of times, your passes are like runs and your runs can come out like passes. Everything is really built off each other formationally. You have things that work off of each other schematically. They're all intertwined. The other place where it shows up is third down. If you do a better job on first or second down, whether it's the run game or completion mindset in the pass game, it gets you more manageable third downs. Third downs haven't been the problem. It's the distance to go on third downs."

Q: When an offense isn't performing as well as you want it to, there are two schools of thought. You can retreat a little bit and go back to basics or you can expand what you do to try different things. Do you have a rule of thumb there or is it just feel for situation, your players, and the opponent?

McAdoo: "I think you have to take a look at certain areas and certain situations. Push the limits on where you've had success. Get back to the basics on where you haven't had success. I don't think you can say in one statement that we have to go back to basics, or that we have to expand. I think you have to look at players first, not plays. Situations where you've had success and haven't been as successful as you'd like. Push the envelope there a little bit. At the end of the day, it comes back to fundamentals. If you're blocking well enough in the run game, you're probably going to run the ball well enough in the run game. If your protection is good, you're creating some separation in the pass game and you're accurate in the pass game, you're going to have some success in the pass game. Scheme may give you a slight advantage at points in time, but it all comes back to the fundamentals."

Q: The last couple of weeks, the longest completion to a wideout is 16 yards. As you play these games and then look at the tape, are teams focused on playing both safeties deep and taking away the long ball?

McAdoo: "Teams want to make us go the long way. It's probably pretty smart. They don't want to let Odell (Beckham, Jr.) wreck the game. That's been their focus. He's had a lot of man coverage underneath and a safety over the top. Sometimes another safety leaning that way. They want to force you to go elsewhere, force you to run the ball and be patient. A lot of that has to do with if teams make you go the long way, you're going to make a mistake and it's going to kill the drive. A penalty or a mental error. That can certainly happen. Where we are in the season, we should be very confident in our ability to minimize the penalties. None in on the mental part of the game so we don't make those types of mistakes, so we can go the long way."

Q: Eli Manning said at his locker the other day that he has to play better. Are you glad to see the leader of the team take responsibility like that, or would you prefer he not put it all on his shoulders?

McAdoo: "It's not all on his shoulders. I think it's the sign of a great leader to be willing to put himself out there. It's my responsibility and the players' responsibility. We have to do it together. It's not coaching, playing, play-calling. It's players and coaches coming together. When you decide that you've had enough, you've had enough. Execute the way you're capable of executing. Calling the game the way you're capable of calling the game. Going out and playing well enough to win."

Q: You have talked about blocking out outside noise. When Eli spoke to the media, he was asked whether the big hit against Washington has affected how he feels physically and if it has affected his performance this season. In your three years with him, is he good at blocking out that outside stuff?

McAdoo: "I think he's great at it. We have a relationship where we can talk about anything. Any distraction, anything coming up from the outside or any noise that's coming up, anything that happens, we can talk about and put it on the table. I think it's important for everyone to know that I have his back. We're committed to him. He's played great football here. He's a champion. He's a leader. We flushed last week and we're moving on to this week."

Q: You've said many times that your offense has to complete a high percentage of your passes. Eli actually has his highest completion percentage of his career right now. Do you look at that and think maybe he is playing a little better than people are giving him credit for?

McAdoo: "When you look at it, we've played two tremendous defenses on the road in tough environments (in Minnesota and Green Bay). We haven't executed as well as we've needed to. We need to run the ball better, complete the ball better, so we have manageable third downs so we can stay on track and ahead of the chains. We haven't done that. Everything is tied together. It's not just one thing. It's never just one player. The thing that you keep going back to is when you have success, the quarterback gets a little too much credit. When you don't have success, he gets a little too much blame. That's the way it goes in this league. It's unfortunate that it goes that way, but that's usually the direction that outside forces take it. That's the world we live in. We accept it and move on."

Q: This week you signed Coty Sensabaugh, a cornerback who was recently released by the Rams. Is it easier for a defensive player or an offensive player to prepare to play in a short time period after joining a new team during the season?

McAdoo: "It's not easy with any player. He has to acclimate to a culture. He has to figure out where he's going to live. He's still finding out his way around the meeting rooms. There's a lot of things going on. With that being said, he's a football player. That's what he does for a living. This is pro football. You come in, relate the terminology with what you've learned in the past and you learn as quickly as you can. The coaches are doing a great job spending extra time with him trying to acclimate him to our system. You throw him out there and you go."

Q: Shane Vereen and Darian Thompson traveled to Green Bay last week even though there was no chance they would play. I don't know if many teams do that, and the Giants previously did not bring injured players on trips. Why is it important to you to have them travel?

McAdoo: "I think our team is our team. Just because someone gets banged up or injured doesn't mean you want to exclude them from this team. They're still part of this team. Still have leadership value. Especially players that are going to play for you again in the season. You definitely don't want to alienate guys like that. You want to be as inclusive as you can. The more guys you have pulling in the same direction, the high-character guys like the two you mentioned, the better."

Q: It seems every week you're confronted with an excellent front seven. This week you face Baltimore, which arguably has the league's best. They're in the top five, top seven in all the major statistical categories. What do you see as an offensive coach as you study them?

McAdoo: "They're similar to the front we played last week, just different body types. The scheme might be a little bit similar on first and second down. You can make an argument that they're the best defense that we've faced yet. Very big and physical, heavy-handed up front. They have some explosive pass rushers on the edge and some linebackers that have some savviness inside. They have the complete package. They challenge you schematically. We need to be ready for that. It's good that we have them on our home turf. We're excited to be back at home with the fans behind us. That'll help."

Q: An inside linebacker, C.J. Mosley, leads the team with three interceptions. Is that indicative of his versatility?

McAdoo: "I think it shows how instinctive he is. He gets ball and it shows up on film. You knew that coming out of the draft. We saw clips of him over and over again. He has a good nose for the football."

Q: Marty Mornhinweg took over as the Ravens' new offensive coordinator this week. If a new coordinator is hired in the offseason, you would do a detailed study of his background. Did you do that this week, or are you focused more on their personnel?

McAdoo: "First things first, you have to trust your system and trust your players. Put them in sound calls. We have great scheme here and great coaches. We put the players in a position to be successful. We have all those reps in training camp. After that, you look at the opponent. I'm sure they're going to have some things that they hang their hat on schematically. Study the players, the opponent's players. Every coordinator has a little book on each coordinator in the league on the opposite side of the ball. There are always things that you can refer to that way. The tendencies may change; a couple things may change schematically. At the end of the day when you're this far into it, it's tough to make radical changes in the course of a week."

Q: Is Joe Flacco's throwing arm as strong as anyone you're going to play this year?

McAdoo: "There are a lot of guys that can throw the ball a long way with some good velocity in this league. We just played one last week who can throw the ball pretty good (Aaron Rodgers). Joe definitely has a big arm. He likes to throw the deep ball and put some air under it. Let guys go run underneath it. That's something we have to be on the alert for."

Q: All four of their key special teams players have been Pro Bowlers. Do you look at Justin Tucker as a weapon as a kicker?

McAdoo: "No question. We were just watching some of his kickoffs. You don't think that's a weapon, but the way he can disguise where he's going with the ball is a weapon for him. Usually kickers by the way they line up give away everything they're going to do. He's pretty insightful with the way he disguises it."

Q: Baltimore is the only team in the league that has had every one of its games decided by six points or less – that extends to 17 of their last 21 games. Do you think a team becomes confident when it plays so many games that are close at the end?

McAdoo: "I think it depends if you're winning or losing them. I think it depends on each team. Each game is different. I think it helps with your mindset when you know it's going to be a close game and come down to the fourth quarter. They all do. Even if they're two-score games, they always come down to the fourth quarter. Once you get over 16 points, that's usually when they're a little out of hand in the fourth quarter. If it's 14 points or less, in the blink of an eye, that game can change. You can be right back in it or the other team could be right back in it. I think playing in those real close games gets your mind right for the end of the game to make a run at it."

The McAdoo Report Week 7

The McAdoo Report

By Michael Eisen

October 21, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, an exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo (Note: this interview was conducted prior to the Giants' announcement that Josh Brown would not travel with the team to London):

Q: You will have your bye week after playing the Rams in London. At the risk of asking the obvious, how important is it to go into the bye at 4-3 with a two-game winning streak as opposed to 3-4 with a loss and having to sit on it for two weeks?

McAdoo: "You don't want to sit on a loss for two hours, let alone two weeks. That's not our motivation. We need to make sure we stay on top of our preparation this week. It's a different type of week for us. We're going to embrace it as far as that goes. Everything is about focusing in and dialing in with our preparation on Wednesday and Thursday. That's a huge part of the week."

Q: You have a lot going on there. You have media availability and the Play 60 event. Is your message this week focus and stay on the task at hand?

McAdoo: "Absolutely. If you chase two rabbits, you'll catch none. It's important that we be where our feet are. Embrace everything that's coming our way. Make sure we stay in the moment as best as we can."

Q: Do you want the players to try and enjoy the trip outside of football?

McAdoo: "Yes. I'm going to talk to them. We're going to try and give them a little time on Friday afternoon and Friday evening. On Saturday, we'll back the meetings up a little bit. Shorten them up at night and give them a chance to spend some quality time together. Go out to dinner together and enjoy the city. We're being smart, but I think it's important to be a human being once in a while for these guys. It'll help them."

Q: In your news conference after the victory against Baltimore, you said, "I am a defensive head coach." But you've been an offensive assistant throughout your career. What did you mean by that? As a head coach, do you have to be a defensive head coach first?

McAdoo: "I believe that the best teams are the physical, heavy-handed football teams. I think you have to let your practices gravitate toward defensive football. Do whatever you can to make the defense successful. Make sure those practices are physical. What it does is it rubs over to the offensive side of the ball. It makes the offensive line more physical and the offense more physical. Does that always create the best looking practices out there? No. A defensive practice, a physical, heavy-handed practice from the defensive side of the ball makes a messy practice. Good defensive football creates messes everywhere. It creates football that's not very clean from an offensive perspective. That's a challenge for me sometimes, but that's what the best teams look like in this league."

Q: You went for it twice on fourth down in the last game (before the final play, when you had to go for it). When you do that, are you showing more confidence in your defense or your offense?

McAdoo: "I talked to the team on Tuesday afternoon. I told them and said that every time that we cross the 50, I need to be thinking about going for it. That's the confidence I have in the offense and the defense. Whatever happens, I'm counting on our defense to make the stop. Also, when we cross the 50, we have a punter (Brad Wing) that's very good at downing the ball inside the 10-yard line. I have to keep that in mind. If we weren't as good at downing the ball inside the 10, I would probably go for it more."

Q: Brad Wing had a net of more than 50 yards the other day. Was he an unsung contributor in the game?

McAdoo: "Yes. He got one of our game balls. As well as the coverage team, (which) flipped the field a few times. That really creates a tremendous advantage for your team in field position."

Q: Last week, Eli Manning was asked if he is too old or hurt or whatever. Then he goes out and throws for 403 yards and three touchdowns. As you looked at the tape, what did he do well?

McAdoo: "He completed the ball (32 of 46 passes). That's always important, especially if you're not running it as well as you'd like. Some of those completions were really just an extension of the run game. Winning the down that way. He stayed aggressive even though some things happened during the course of the game that weren't advantageous. He still stayed aggressive with his adjustments and played with that type of mindset. That mindset that we want him to play with. We want him to ask for forgiveness, not permission. That's how we want the quarterback position to be played here. The ball is in his hand every snap. The guys feed off of that. He had a couple of turnovers in the ballgame. He had positive decisions on both of the turnovers. As long as his decisions are positive, we understand the throws aren't always going to be perfect. The routes aren't always going to be perfect. As long as we're making good decisions, that's part of the game."

Q: Odell Beckham, Jr. is a very strong-willed, emotional young man with tremendous talent. Do you have to keep talking to him after events good and bad?

McAdoo: "He showed how important the game and his teammates are to him on Sunday. Fumbled the first play of the game, gets nicked up, comes back in, plays lights out and really puts us in a great position to win the game. Most guys don't come back in the ballgame with the type of injury (hip pointer) he had. He came in and he fought through it. He played tremendous. It's a credit to him and how he feels about the other men in the locker room."

Q: You had trouble running the ball again the other day. You've had a low time of possession, and Sunday's game was the second time you won with a minus-3 turnover differential, which doesn't happen often in the NFL. Do you believe at some point you have to change the formula a little bit in terms of taking care of the ball and running the ball better?

McAdoo: "Yes. Running the ball is something that we have to get better at. We can't start slow. We started too slow and for too long. Some of it was good defense. You have to give their defense credit. Some of it was bad offense. We have to fix that. We stayed the course. It's a 60-minute game. Thank goodness it wasn't a 21-minute game, because we would've been in trouble. We stuck with it. Fixing the mistakes in this league takes time. It takes perseverance. It's not going to happen overnight. It looks like it may take us half the season to get the turnover part of things figured out. If it does, so be it. We have to put time and energy into fixing it. It has to be important."

Q: Do you have the same attitude with the running game? It may take half the season, but you have to keep doing it?

McAdoo: "We have to keep running the ball. We've had good games running the ball. We've played some tough defenses, but that's no excuse. We still have to run the ball better."

Q: In training camp, you were often asked about Janoris Jenkins. Since the season began, his name has seldom been raised. You have had other players hurt in the secondary. How valuable has Janoris been back there?

McAdoo: "He's a football player that loves the game. He's a tremendous competitor, you see that down in and down out. He's not just a cover corner. He plays the run game. He made a tremendous play on the goal line stand and gave us a chance to keep playing football. Allowed that last play that JC (Jonathan Casillas made on a fourth-and-goal) to happen. He's a great example for the young players on how to prepare each and every week to go out there on Sunday to be at your best."

Q: Another week, you're playing another very good defensive front. Aaron Donald of the Rams is barely 6-1, yet he might be the league's best defensive lineman. How does he do what he does? He's such a disruptor.

McAdoo: "He's got a tremendous first step. He's from southwestern Pennsylvania (as is McAdoo), so that doesn't hurt him. He has a tremendous first step. He's very twitchy. He's explosive. He can string moves together and he's slippery. He's not the biggest guy in the world. Sometimes that works out to his advantage. He has tremendous instincts, too. He gets football."

Q: Robert Quinn has a league-high 17 forced fumbles in the last three seasons. You don't want the offensive players worried about it, but do they have to stress that this guy creates fumbles?

McAdoo: "It's like trying to block a sprinter playing defensive end. He plays very low to the ground. It looks like he's running a slant every time he comes off the ball. He takes a quick three steps, sticks his foot in the ground and goes right to the quarterback. Tremendous pass rusher. He is always leaning toward the quarterback. If he's out there and going, we certainly need to be ready for him."

Q: Offensively, the Rams have a really good group of skill players. (Running back) Todd Gurley doesn't have a high average, but everyone knows what he can do. The quarterback (Case Keenum) is also playing well. They have a lot of good players.

McAdoo: "Their offense is ascending. They're getting better. Keenum has found his groove a little bit here over the last three weeks or so. He's completing a high percentage of balls. Big body receivers who can catch the ball everywhere. They have great range that can come up with the catches. Their tight end is playing well, (Lance) Kendricks, he's a good player and a complete player, which is tough to find in today's game. Of course, Gurley. He really has a chance to make everything go for them. We really have to stop him and commit to stopping him."

Q: With John Fassel as the special teams coordinator, do you have to be ready for the unusual?

McAdoo: "Yes. Their special teams unit is really unorthodox. Especially their punt team. They force you to defend the wing T in some form or fashion when they have their misdirections, their gadgets, deceptives and their behinds, arounds and the passes that come off of them. They have a little bit of everything. Their punter is a guy that warms up with the quarterbacks. He has that in his background. He can really make a lot of throws. We have to be on our A-game there."

The McAdoo Report Week 9

The McAdoo Report

By Michael Eisen

November 4, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, an exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: We haven't spoken since the game in London. Did you enjoy that experience?

McAdoo: "We have to give the operations department credit. Everything was pretty seamless. Took the flight, got some rest and hit the ground running. Fresh Friday had a little different twist to it. The walkthrough on the Duke's lawn was interesting. The players embraced it. We got them some rest Friday night and had a good practice on Saturday. It paid off for us on Sunday."

Q: You said earlier this week that you don't really like the bye week. A lot of coaches say that they like the break in the routine. You don't like the break?

McAdoo: "No. I don't like the bye week. I enjoy and cherish the grind. I like the grind and the routine. Keeping your foot on the gas, especially when you have a couple of wins in a row. I enjoy that part of it."

Q: You're forced to take some time off. Can you relax when you have to do that or do you find that you're still working?

McAdoo: "I try and do as best I can. Take a couple hours. The first part of the bye week you're thinking about the past couple of weeks. The next couple days you're thinking about the future. You try and get as much time on the past as you can as far as evaluating the team. Then looking forward to the next game or the next two games. How you want to handle things. We have some scheduling things in the future coming up. How you want to handle the next Monday Night game and Thanksgiving."

Q: When you do have a bye week or a Monday Night game and you're home on a Sunday, do you like to watch football?

McAdoo: "I like to have games on as I'm doing other things so I can catch bits and pieces. I'm a football fan. I love football. I'm a junkie that way. My son (BJ) loves it; my daughter (Larkin), she enjoys it. My wife (Toni) does. My daughter, when we play, she'll sit down and write play-by-play's of the game as we go. My son will put his helmet on and want to play football and throw footballs. It's a family activity for us."

Q: Your daughter scripts plays already?

McAdoo: "Yes, she does. I have pictures of her last year on the road. She was sitting down doing play-by-plays as the game was going on. She enjoys that part of it."

Q: We heard a lot of your self-scouting over the bye week. You're always looking at your team, watching tape and out at practice. How much do you really find out that you didn't know by self-scouting during the bye week?

McAdoo: "Not much as far as tendencies, (which) are a week-to-week deal. You really know who you are tendency-wise each and every week. During the bye week, you really have a chance to go back and look at more film of yourself. Look at it through concepts. Study not just tendencies. Anybody can just crunch out a number. It just depends on how you tell yourself the story. Statistics, you can twist and turn any way that you want. You have a chance to go back and actually look at the Jimmy's and Joe's performing the concepts. To me, that's the biggest value of the bye week. You can see how the concepts unfold. Is there merit in continuing to build on concepts that were productive or unproductive? Is it a factor of execution? Are we putting guys in a position to be successful or is it something we should get rid of all together?"

Q: Did you come out of the bye week after the self-scouting and find a couple of things that surprised you a little bit?

McAdoo: "Yes absolutely. The other thing is, you have to be careful of the other wrinkles you put in. You don't want to have a whole game plan full of wrinkles and the players play too slow. You have to put them in, pick and choose what you like. Don't outsmart your common sense. Really go with what fits against your next opponent. It's a matchup league."

Q: Do you look at things like the fact that you've score a lot more points in the second and fourth quarters than the first and the third quarters? Are those the kinds of things that you look at also?

McAdoo: "It's part of it. It's part of being able to start quicker in the offense. Getting off the field quicker on defense and earlier in the drives. It's concept related. Trying a couple of things to get the game going quicker on offense, especially in the first and third quarters."

Q: Each of the last two games you've fallen behind 10-0 early (and came back to win both games). In those situations, do you tell your players to just stick with the plan?

McAdoo: "Last week was an interesting week. Second week in a row that it happened. We were in London. There was a lot going on. It's early in the season, but we've been through a lot as a team already. Last week, we really didn't need to say anything. We all knew. Just hang in there and keep swinging and playing hard. Focus on the play. Don't worry about the scoreboard. Guys hung in there, they kept playing. No one blinked or flinched. You just kept playing and it worked out."

Q: Is the first thing on your agenda to not turn the ball over on the opening possession (as the Giants did each of the last two games)?

McAdoo: "Yes. Take care of the ball. Obviously, we need to take care of the ball. The first and second play of the game, we certainly don't want a turnover. We don't want a turnover in the game, let alone the first or second play. Whatever happens in the game, you have to roll with the punches sometimes. You have to keep playing. You can't worry about it. You can't hang on to that. You have to go ahead and flush it. Move on to the next play."

Q: Is the positive spin that you kept your cool, fought back and won both games? It shows that you can fight through adversity to win games?

McAdoo: "I think we're building a strong-minded, physical, heavy-handed team. We're building a team that has gone through adversity and believes that when it's crunch time and we have to go through adversity again, we just set our jaw and keep going."

Q: How much does the red zone touchdown percentage (42.1) tie into the trouble you have running the ball?

McAdoo: "I believe we've run the ball better in the red zone this year than we have the last couple of years. We've had more rushing touchdowns down there, I do believe. I don't think that factors as much. When you do run the ball and you are balanced in the red zone, they don't come out and you don't get an explosive gain or win the down, it makes it harder in the passing game. The field is shorter down there. Some say that the points are in the passing game. I believe the points are in balanced football. I believe in running the football and having things come off of the run game. That makes for a good red zone, green zone offense. We need to keep running the ball and to be balanced. We need to be aggressive with what we're doing in the passing game. The most important thing about it is we need to get down there more. We're not down there enough. We get down there more, those reps which you learn from down there builds throughout the season. We get down there more, we'll learn more about these weapons that we have, what they do well in game-like situations, and be able to attack better."

Q: In your time in the league, can you make a general statement about a team coming off a bye? Does it sometimes take time to get back on track?

McAdoo: "Well, we need to start fast in the game. That's important this week. Again, it's not like we haven't played in a month. Every team goes through it. It's not something I'm spending a ton of time thinking of. We got in an extra practice this week. We got some time meeting wise and some feet meets (meeting on their feet) on Tuesday. We had good energy at practice (Wednesday) and had good tempo. We finished three minutes ahead of schedule. That's a good sign for a Wednesday practice."

Q: When you last played, Landon Collins had eight solo tackles, two interceptions, a touchdown and set up the other touchdown. He was the NFC Defensive Player of the Week. Are we watching a player develop into really one of the better safeties in the league?

McAdoo: "I think he's a young player that got a lot of experience as a rookie. He's continuing to grow. He has good football instincts. Seems like it's in every fabric of him where he's a football player. He gets ball. Whether it's special teams or defense, you can count on him. He's a tremendous tackler. He has leadership qualities that I like. He's developing in the back end in the pass game and his ball skills are improving. That's a good combination."

Q: Robbie Gould flew to London on short notice to kick against the Rams, and then he stayed here during the bye week, when he went over to the stadium to kick. What can you say about the way he does his job, prepares himself and carries himself?

McAdoo: "He showed up and fits in with the guys. Showed up in London ready to kick. Got used to a new long snapper and new holder. New coaching staff and everything. New time zone. He got over there, learned quickly and jumped right in with both feet. He's a veteran and a confident guy. He's been there, he's done that and we're fortunate to have him."

Q: This team has obviously not had recent success against the Eagles (whom the Giants host Sunday). Do you think that will provide extra motivation, or should you not need extra motivation against a divisional opponent?

McAdoo: "You shouldn't need extra motivation any week to perform against anyone in this league. Every game is important. You only get one a week. To have a 1 o'clock game at home in the division, it's exciting. One o'clock games at home are great. Anytime we can get in front of the home fans and have their support. You get it eight times a year, hopefully more. You have to cherish those opportunities."

Q: Especially because it's against a team you're tied with in the division?

McAdoo: "Farm our own land. We need to take care of our own business. Everything is in front of us."

Q: You've played a lot of good front fours this season. Is it fair to say Philadelphia's might be the best at pressuring the quarterback?

McAdoo: "Yes. They're loaded up front in the D-line. Inside, they're physical guys that can play and have athleticism. They're deep at all four spots. They'll rotate. It's like line-switching in hockey. They'll play one line and then rotate out with a completely new, fresh defensive line. Those guys are just as good. They all have some tricks of the trade. They play with some width and get up the field. They have speed to power. We have our work cut out for us."

Q: Some teams we talk about bring a lot of extra pressure and blitz a lot. The Eagles don't do that. Does that present a different challenge because they can rush the quarterback with four and have so many other guys in coverage?

McAdoo: "(Philadelphia defensive coordinator Jim) Schwartz does a good job. It's not his first rodeo. I've gone against him for years when he was in Detroit (where he was head coach from 2009-13) and I was in Green Bay. He can play a variety of different types of games. What you're seeing on tape may not necessarily be what you get on Sunday. You have to be ready for a coverage game and a post safety coverage game. You have to be ready for a pressure game and a bear-type game. They can play a variety of different ways. He's going to try and beat the quarterback. We have to be ready to adjust and improvise as the game goes on."

Q: If you looked at a tape of them blind not knowing the team or the player, would Carson Wentz look like a rookie quarterback?

McAdoo: "No. I think he's acclimated well to the pro game. Obviously, he has the physical tools. He's a smart guy. That gives him a head start right away. I think he moves well in the pocket. Does it with two hands on the ball. Does a nice job of escaping the pocket. He can do it either way and make throws either way. He's done a nice job."

Q: Their system really helps him not get too flustered. They throw a lot of short passes early to get him comfortable. Does he look comfortable to you?

McAdoo: "Yes. We keep talking about all these short passes. I wouldn't be surprised if they try and throw the ball down the field early in the ball game a little bit. Sometimes the offense that he's in doesn't get a lot of credit for pushing the ball down the field. He has to go where the coverage dictates the ball to go. Obviously, it shows he's not going to force the ball if he doesn't have to."

Q: How dangerous is Darren Sproles?

McAdoo: "Very dangerous. He's like a fine wine. He gets better as he gets older. They're running him more from under center. They look for a variety of ways to get his hands on the football. He's a tough tackle. Whether it's in the return game or he's coming out of the backfield as a receiver. We just have to make sure we bend our knees, wrap and squeeze and roll."

Q: Their special teams have about as much depth as any team. They already have two kickoff returns for touchdowns, their kicker has made 17 in a row, and they have a good, veteran punter.

McAdoo: "They're very good on special teams. They have a core group of guys that really focus and spend their time on special teams. They do a nice job. They're physical and combative. They play with good speed. Their returners do a nice job. They're each a little bit different, so you have to know who has their hands on the ball. That'll help our guys. They're very talented there."

The McAdoo Report Week 10

The McAdoo Report
By Michael Eisen
November 12, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, Giants.com's exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: Half the season remains. Have you developed a routine about when you spend time with the offense, defense and special teams when you're game-planning, etc.? Do you like the components that goes into being a head coach?

McAdoo: "Yes. I love normal, consistent, seven-day weeks where you play at home on Sunday. Those are the best. In front of the home fans, those are the best weeks. Other than that, there's a lot of adjusting and improvising in this league. You have short weeks, long weeks, bye weeks, night games. You have to be able to adjust and improvise along the way. I think we have all the kinks worked out in the schedule. We like to change the schedule. We're through eight games, then you change it a little bit on Wednesdays. You give them REM Wednesdays. Then, the last four weeks or so, five weeks after Thanksgiving, we'll incorporate REM Thursdays to give them even more rest, so we can ascend through the last quarter of the season."

Q: Do the REM's involve more than letting them sleep and arrive later?

McAdoo: "The meetings are adjusted, the practices are slightly adjusted and you give them extra sleep."

Q: For someone who has spent his career on the offensive side of the ball, how do you like getting a taste of defense and special teams?

McAdoo: "It's just three-fold now. There's a lot more on your plate. I enjoy it. I enjoy having my hands on the whole team and being a part of all three phases."

Q: Do you introduce the opponent to the team on Tuesday?

McAdoo: "Yes. Our schedule is such that we like to get a jump start on the opponent on Tuesdays. That's part of the benefit of the players' days off on Monday. When they come in on Tuesday, you correct and address the last game, then get a chance to get a jump start on the next opponent on Tuesday."

Q: You address the players every day. Do you set time aside every day to get your thoughts together about exactly what you want to say to the players each time you stand in front of them?

McAdoo: "That's a 24/7 process. That never ends. You're always thinking about messaging. Whether it's something that's happening with the schedule, something that's happening within the league, or something that's happening outside the building and the league in society. You're always thinking about how you want to choose your language with the players."

Q: You've been asked a lot about the rushing attack (which is ranked last in the league). The 2011 Giants were last in the NFL in rushing and won the Super Bowl. You keep talking about improving the rushing attack, but is it possible that this is who you are? You're going to win games without rushing the ball for a lot of yards and possessing it for a long time?

McAdoo: "We need to find a way to get better each week. (Walks over to a plaque on his bookcase and reads), 'The better we get at getting better, the faster we will get better.' That's what we need to focus on each and every week. Get better at getting better, find a way to get a win and move on week to week. Nothing is where we want it to be yet. Nothing. We feel that we can get better at everything we're doing, even the things we're doing at a high level. To me, that's where you're focused. The biggest word is 'yet.' We're not where we want to be yet. We just have to keep working."

Q: Last week, you faced a third-and-four late in the game. You called a pass. Eli Manning's throw was tipped at the line and intercepted. A lot of head coaches might have been conservative and run the ball and not take a chance at a turnover. Play callers like to be aggressive and you went for it. Does Ben McAdoo, the head coach, ever disagree with Ben McAdoo, the play caller?

McAdoo: "No. I believe in being aggressive. It's how I grew up in the game. I love the way Spags (defensive coordinator Steve Spagnuolo) called the defense at the end of the game in the sudden change (by blitzing rookie quarterback Carson Wentz after the interception). Aggressive pressure. Went after him. I believe you play offense the same way. We're never going to sit on the ball. We have an opportunity to win the game on third-and-four. With the franchise quarterback that we have and the players we have on offense, we're going to go win the game. We had a couple of opportunities there for a first down. The ball was tipped at the perfect time. Connor Barwin made a heck of a play. Got his hand up at just the right time and tipped the ball. Have to give them credit. We're not going to take five seconds off the clock (on a run) and hope we get a first down on a low percentage call, punt and give them 1:42 or whatever on the clock. We're going to be aggressive and want to win the game right there. Yes, there is internal conflict at times. There is internal conflict at times, but not in that situation."

Q: So your play calling self has to have a discussion with your head coaching self at times?

McAdoo: "At times."

Q: In general, is the red zone a good place to be aggressive on defense?

McAdoo: "I think each and every situation is different and each and every opponent is different. You have to know who you are and what you do best. I just love when the game is on the line, playing aggressive."

Q: There's been a lot of talk and questions this week about young players, many of whom are contributing significantly. What is your philosophy about bringing along the young players?

McAdoo: "Like I said earlier in the year, teaching, coaching, parenting and leading are all kind of wrapped up into one. When you get your hands on young players, the better you do in all those four roles and bring guys along early, give them a taste early of what it's like to play in these games, the more success that they'll have. Not to say that they won't have failures, but they'll get a chance to learn from those failures when the pressure may not be as high or impactful as it is in January, December or February. They'll have a chance to get some of those mistakes, those young player mistakes, out of the way early on."

Q: Is this the time, with half of the season to go, that you would expect them to start making contributions like this?

McAdoo: "I think they're all different. It depends on who they are. Each of the players is different. Some will ascend a little quicker than others. That's why we call it development. They all have different stages that they go through."

Q: One guy that's made a couple of plays is Roger Lewis. You had a lot of receivers in training camp that seemed to be bunched together. Did Lewis stand out to you early?

McAdoo: "He was a guy that we thought highly of through the scouting process. We knew he was going to have a lot to learn coming from the type of (spread) offense that he came from. He really works hard at learning and works hard on the practice field. If you work hard in the meeting room, on the practice field and you have the nice skillset that he has, it's nice to see a guy that works out the way he works and the success as early as he's having it."

Q: You play Monday night against the Bengals, who have one of the NFL's best wide receivers in A.J. Green. How difficult is it to cover a player that can really produce at all three levels?

McAdoo: "The tough part about him, obviously, he has speed. His length is very hard to defend. He has a big catch radius. Even if he's covered, he still has a chance to come up with the ball. When they place the ball high and wide, it's easy for him to come up and make the catch in the red zone. To make those high back catches at the face mask or above. A lot of times, it seems that DB's are just short when they try to tip the ball away or knock the ball away from him just because of that length. (Quarterback) Andy (Dalton) has a good feel on where to place it."

Q: With (tight end) Tyler Eifert back, they have a lot of weapons.

McAdoo: "They have elite skill players. They have four of them. Both backs (Jeremy Hill and Giovanni Bernard), the tight end and A.J. They do a good job of getting them the ball. They're creative with it. They force you to prepare for a lot of things that way. At the end of the day, they do a tremendous job getting the ball in those guys' hands. Letting them do something with it long and short."

Q: Dalton gets somewhat overlooked, but he must be doing something right. And he has an excellent road record.

McAdoo: "No one talks about the quarterback. The thing is he does a great job of protecting the ball. He can place the ball where he wants to, he's accurate, he runs the offense really well. We had a chance to practice against him last year (in Cincinnati before the first preseason game). Developed a lot of respect for him that week. Down there, I didn't get to see him much because we were on the other field going against the defense. Going back and looking at some of the things they did in practice that week, he had a nice week. Runs the offense at a high level. Gets it to his playmakers and is very accurate."

Q: Their defensive ends are like NBA players. They're all 6-foot-6 or bigger. They've batted down 13 passes this season. Does Eli have to be cognizant that they're going to get their hands up?

McAdoo: "Absolutely. We have a plan for that this week in practice. We're working it out there in our seven-on-seven drills. Also, the offensive line has responsibility there as well. They have to get their hands down and keep them down."

Q: In general, they have a strong front. Carlos Dunlap was fourth in the league last year with 13.5 sacks.

McAdoo: "We saw some of him last year. He may have been nicked up a little bit early on in the preseason. They can get pressure on the quarterback with the front four. They do have a nice pressure package. They do a good job of taking you out by chipping the defensive ends with the multiple looks they give you. That front four is long. They don't necessarily have to be rushing to disrupt the quarterback. They can push the pocket a little bit. Get their hands up. (Tackle) Geno (Atkins) is a guy that's like the Tasmanian Devil in there. He has a quick first step. He can stick and move in there, be disruptive."

The McAdoo Report Week 11

The McAdoo Report
By Michael Eisen
November 18, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo report, Giants.com's exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: You have a four-game winning streak. Do you believe you can carry momentum from one week to the next in the NFL?

McAdoo: "I believe in putting a solid week of preparation in. I think that pays off on Sundays or Mondays, whenever you play."

Q: The Giants' six wins have been by a total 21 points, and you're 3-1 in games decided by three points or less. Are poise and execution the keys to playing well at the end of close games? What kind of mindset do the players have when they win close games?

McAdoo: "I think the guys believe. When you put in a good week of practice, you study your opponent well and know the plan well, you can go out and trust your teammates and play with confidence. That helps."

Q: Do you sense that the more you win the close games, the more confidence you get? Down the stretch, the players believe they're going to find a way to win the game?

McAdoo: "Yes. Each week is obviously a new week. We do believe we're going to win the close games. We have confidence. Guys don't waver or watch the scoreboard. They're aware of the situations. We talk about being aware of the situations and not watching the scoreboard. Just playing the play. I think that has a lot to do with it at the end of games. Just play the play you're on. Don't necessarily worry about the clock or the scoreboard, or any of those types of things. Just focus on your job and trusting your teammates."

Q: There's been a lot of talk about your aggressive decision-making. The winning touchdown on fourth down Monday night (in the 21-20 victory against Cincinnati) is a case in point. You went for it on another fourth down and Eli (Manning) was sacked. You also went for the jugular after the (Landon) Collins interception and Eli's pass was picked off. Is that part of doing business when you're aggressive? Do you take the bad with the good sometimes?

McAdoo: "No. We don't want to take the bad with the good. That's not a part of it. We want to be aggressive, but we want to be able to execute and put ourselves in positive situations. That goes back to practice. If we practice the situation well and we execute in practice, then you're more confident in the game going into the situation and giving yourself a chance to be successful."

Q: Eli has 10 touchdown passes and six interceptions over the last four games. Do you want Eli to take chances? I'm sure you don't want the interceptions, but do you want him to think about taking his shots?

McAdoo: "Yes. We talk all the time about being aggressive. I want him to play the game aggressively. I want him to see it and I want him to go after it when he knows what's coming. I want him to stay within the family, so to speak, in the concept that we're working to do that. So we can get everything on film that we can. I want him to be aggressive. We understand that you're going to miss some throws in this league, that's a part of it. The defense is going to make some plays, that's a part of it. What we can't have is turnovers based on decision-making. If it's not there, you have to go onto number two. If two is not there, you have to work to number three. You can't turn the ball over based on decision-making. That's probably the biggest thing. He's been solid there."

Q: Is there a line between making sure he's careful, but not taking his aggressiveness away?

McAdoo: "Yes. I don't want him to be careful. You're not going to play that position well playing careful. We want to play aggressively and be in attack mode. We don't want to be careful by any stretch of the imagination. We want to go after what we see. We understand that you're going to miss some throws, that's part of it. We have to make good decisions pre-snap and when the ball is snapped. If it's not there, check it down. If you have to throw it away, throw it away. If you have to take a sack, you can take a sack, too. What we don't want to do is make poor decisions. It's about choosing our words properly, too. It's not, 'We can't have turnovers.' It's about taking care of the football and being a good decision-maker."

Q: Against Philadelphia, when you were protecting a lead late in the game, you had Paul Perkins in the backfield, and you threw the ball on third-and-four. (The pass was intercepted.) On Monday night, you were protecting a late lead, had Rashad Jennings in the game, and ran the ball on third-and-six (for a 9-yard gain). Did you view those situations as similar?

McAdoo: "Yes. I think both end of the game situations were very similar. We felt that we had two quality plays in both situations. One we executed and one we didn't. One happened to be a hand off and one happened to be a pass. They were two plays that we went after and felt good about. We thought we had a chance to be successful in both of them."

Q: Odell (Beckham, Jr.) had 10 catches the other day, but gained 97 yards, which is well under his average. But he showed no signs of frustration or annoyance. He just took what they gave him. Did you see that as well and is that a further sign of his growth?

McAdoo: "They certainly made it tough on him to get down the field. He had a couple of opportunities to get down the field, but we weren't able to get him the rock. That's how it goes in this league. We're going to face good defenses and teams that are going to try and eliminate him and take him out of the game. They did everything they could to try and take him out of the game. To get him 10 touches was challenging. He was very detailed and did the job underneath. He made some tough catches in some traffic. Helped us move the chains."

Q: Your rushing offense has received a lot of attention, but your run defense has not. You've held four consecutive opponents to less than 100 yards on the ground. Has your run defense been something you've been relatively pleased with?

McAdoo: "Every week, yes. Every week, you talk about stopping the run. That's the starting point for really every game plan on defense. If you stop the run, the things that go with the run are less successful. Being the guy who calls plays on offense, I understand that the things that come off of the run game are just as important as the run game. When you have it taken away, it makes it more challenging."

Q: You think your run defense has been good the last few games?

McAdoo: "Yes. I'm not going to sit here and pat ourselves on the back. We're preparing for a game this week. It's always encouraging to stop the run. We have another big challenge ahead of us this week (against Chicago)."

Q: For a guy who has played tackle basically his entire career, is it a difficult transition for Marshall Newhouse to play guard?

McAdoo: "No question. Not only does it speak volumes about his preparation and his work ethic, but he's a smart football player that has played a lot of football. Not only to be able to switch sides, but to go inside, it's a challenge. He certainly rose to the occasion and did a nice job in there for us."

Q: How do you approach the short week after the Monday night game? Do you try to get extra rest for the players? Did you start on Chicago on Monday when you had a few hours before the Bengals game?

McAdoo: "Yes. We had a jump start on Chicago. The position coaches did. The coordinators and the head coach did not, but the position coaches got a jump start on them. A lot of the ground work was laid when we got together on Tuesday morning. The players, we got a little bit of extra rest on Wednesday and they had Tuesday off. Thursday, we had to show up early in the morning ready to work."

Q: Is the game plan instillation and the mental work on a normal schedule?

McAdoo: "Mentally, it's a little bit different. You don't get a chance to jump start them on Tuesday like you normally would. It's no excuse. We have a job to do and we'll be ready to do it come Sunday."

Q: The word on the Bears is they're better than their (2-7) record. When you look at them on tape, what do you see?

McAdoo: "I see a good team. Going against (quarterback) Jay Cutler a bunch of times, I know how dangerous he can be. He's a good player and can make all the throws. The defense is also very well-coached. It's coming into their own. They spent some money up front and they've used some draft picks up there as well. You can see those guys getting healthy and starting to come together. Their front seven is very talented and very long. They can move."

Q: Do you see (rookie) Jordan Howard as a big, strong runner?

McAdoo: "Yes, and he runs that way. His style reflects that he's a big runner. He runs big. He can handle a load. We have to make sure that we stop the run this week. That's a big emphasis for us."

Q: Zach Miller is a capable tight end. When you watch Cutler on tape, is he looking for Zach a lot?

McAdoo: "Anytime you have a threat that can run down the middle of the field, it helps your pass game, especially against split-safety looks. They've played a lot of different quarterbacks, but he looks like he's becoming a favorite target of Jay's."

Q: How big of a difference have Jerrell Freeman and Danny Trevathan made in their defense?

McAdoo: "They do a nice job. They're communicators. You can see that on film. They do a good job getting everything together. They have a lot of players from different backgrounds. Whether they're coming out of college or from different teams, they're helping get everything gelled together and you can see it on film."

The McAdoo Report Week 12

The McAdoo Report
By Michael Eisen
November 26, 2016

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The McAdoo Report, Giants.com's exclusive weekly interview with head coach Ben McAdoo:

Q: How was your Thanksgiving?

McAdoo: "Great Thanksgiving. My wife, Toni, cooked one heck of a meal. My daughter, (7-year-old) Larkin was in charge of making sure we had everything that pertained to the Pilgrims and the history covered. My son (4-year-old BJ) and I played football until it was time for dinner. It was great. I won. He ran out of time."

Q: You said you watched parts of the Thanksgiving Day NFL games? Were you more interested in the division game (Dallas-Washington) or watching Scott Tolzien, your old protégé, play quarterback for Indianapolis?

McAdoo: "I watched a little bit of the Dallas-Washington game. It's interesting to see two very good teams. It was nice. I enjoyed watching Scott play. I knew he'd be well prepared and he was. He made some nice throws. They fell behind early, but it was nice to see him out there playing."

Q: Six weeks to go in the season. Things are starting to crystalize in the division and wild card races. Do you talk to the players about where they stand, or do you want them to just focus on the game? Are you talking about big picture at all?

McAdoo: "No. We need to focus on our preparation for the week. We have a big game on Sunday (in Cleveland). That's what's important, not what goes on outside of here. We need to focus on our own preparation and farm our own land."

Q: I don't know if you heard, but the Browns are 0-11. You've coached in a game similar to this one. You were with the Packers when they played the Lions in the last game of Detroit's 0-16 season. How did you approach that game as far as the opposing team's record was concerned?

McAdoo: "I witnessed the birth of my daughter and then went to the ball game. It was an interesting day. That game came down to the end (it was decided by 10 points). It was a hard-fought game, and it was a battle until the end. Just like we expect this one to be. These teams, this is what they do for a living. They're pros. We can't expect anything but their best effort and performance. We need to be at our best. If you do not prepare with that menality, you can get beat in this league. You can get beat easily and badly if you're not prepared to play each and every week at the highest level."

Q: Is that game a good lesson for you this week? A team that was 0-15 came into Green Bay and they still fought to the end of the game?

McAdoo: "Absolutely. You need to be at your best each and every week. There are no exceptions. It's a loser's mentality to think otherwise."

Q: Some of your players have said Cleveland is going to win a game this year, and we can't let it be against us. Can negative motivation like that be as strong as positive motivation?

McAdoo: "I could care less what motivates players, as long as they're motivated."

Q: We've talked this season about staying with the run game in particular games. You weren't running the ball as well as you wanted to. The last couple of weeks, you ran for more than 100 yards. Is committing to it over the course of the season the same mentality as sticking with it in a game?

McAdoo: "We're going to stick with the run. We're going to get better with the run and get better at getting better in everything that surrounds the run. The last couple of weeks, the weather turned. We stuck with it. We got more attempts at the plate. We got into a little bit of a rhythm and got physical. When we go back and look at it, our barometer is to win the down. We want to win the down whether we're running it or throwing it. That's something that we're working to improve."

Q: We always hear so much about the importance of communication on the offensive line. You've been shuffling players in and out because of injuries. How does that affect communication and how important is it that you can keep shuffling players in and out and still play well enough to win?

McAdoo: "Shuffling players in and out of the offensive line is probably the biggest challenge in the game. Guys need to be able to communicate visually, verbally and sometimes through osmosis. We have guys that have been in the room together for a while, whether it's been on the active roster or the practice squad. Whatever the case may be, there are guys that have been in the system who are on the practice squad that have been in the system longer than guys on the active squad. That's not a concern."

Q: The first five games, you had four sacks. The last five games, you had 14 sacks. Did anything specific change, or are Jason Pierre-Paul and Olivier Vernon just playing better?

McAdoo: "I think everything is related. Our defense is playing at a high level. I believe we're stopping the run. That's important to us. If you stop the run you can get after the quarterback, you can cover people tightly. It's tough for the quarterback to have a place to go with the ball. When you're covering tightly and he's moving off the spot, if he doesn't have a place to dish the ball because the coverage is tight, he's going to go down. There's no other place to go with it other than throwing it away. We're winning some one-on-one matchups up front and some one-on-one matchups in the secondary with the linebackers in coverage. We're stopping the run and that's a good combination."

Q: Defensively, you've become much better in the fourth quarter, allowing six points in the last four games. How much do you emphasize the importance of the fourth quarter and the importance of finishing strong? Is there something specific you can turn to as to why you're playing so much better in the fourth quarter?

McAdoo: "I think the players respond to what we preach as coaches, and that's just play the play. Don't worry about the scoreboard or the quarter. Don't worry about any of that stuff. Just focus on playing the play, giving it all you can and the effort you can for the one play. When that play's over, you learn from it, you flush it and you move on to the next one. I think that mindset carries throughout the game. When the fourth quarter comes, it doesn't change our mindset. We play the game the same way. We do finish strong and that's more of a belief in each other in all three phases. It doesn't matter how the game goes, we have three phases that can come through at the end."

Q: When Victor Cruz got hurt in Philly two years ago, the other starting receivers were Rueben Randell and Odell (Beckham, Jr.), who was making his first start. Victor was the alpha receiver. Now, he seems to be in more of a secondary role, and Beckham and Sterling Shepard have become the more prominent targets. Is Victor accepting that?

McAdoo: "I don't know if I see that. I think all of the skill players on offense play a role. It depends on which game it is, who the opponent is, which coverage they're playing and what is called and being adjusted to. That really dictates where the ball goes. To me, it's a combination of things as to who gets the targets and the production. Obviously, Odell is going to get his opportunities first. Those are the facts. Outside of Odell, it's a combination."

Q: So this week, Victor could get eight balls thrown to him?

McAdoo: "Exactly. We don't call plays to certain players.

The play call comes in, the situation is a factor and then the way the play uncovers itself versus the coverage that it faces dictates where the ball goes."

Q: When you were asked about Terrelle Pryor the other day, you said you knew of him because he was from southwestern Pennsylvania, your home region. I know how proud you are of that area. Do you just naturally follow guys from Western PA?

McAdoo: "Doesn't everyone? I mean, yes, he was a big-time player at Jeannette High School in a few different sports. Heard about him when he was really young. I followed him coming up and I was hoping that we could keep him in the state of Pennsylvania somewhere. That didn't work out (Pryor went to Ohio State). He had a successful college career. Now he's turning into a successful professional."

Q: When you look at him on tape, do you see a natural receiver? He was a quarterback until last year. Would you know that if you didn't know who he was?

McAdoo: "He's a natural, fluid athlete. Regardless of the position that he's playing, he can change his body to fit the type of skillset you need to have to play that position. He's a natural, fluid mover. Whether he was playing quarterback and running around like he still does a little bit running the read option, dropping back or throwing, or playing slot receiver or outside receiver or anywhere, he's a guy to me that has a skillset and can do a lot of different things for you."

Q: (Cleveland's) Josh McCown doesn't get a lot of acclaim as a quarterback, but he knows how to play and knows what he's doing. Is he a smart veteran who knows what he's doing and where to throw the ball?

McAdoo: "He's a pro. He's going to know what you're doing and what the plan is. He's going to be able to figure it out throughout the course of the game. You're going to have to keep some different looks going after him. I was in Green Bay when he was in Chicago and came up. He had a very good performance against us. He's played some very good football in this league. He's won some games. We need to be at our best."

McAdoo: "They're similar to Cincinnati that way. They make you prepare for everything under the sun. You have to defend the whole field. East, west, north and south, as well as the changes with the quarterback that they play. They make you defend the whole field and schematically just about everything under the sun."

Q: Defensively, it seems they have one or two very good players at every level.

McAdoo: "They do. They're young, hungry and fast. You can see them improving on film."
