REGULAR SEASON - WEEK 8 WASHINGTON REDSKINS (3-3) vs. DALLAS COWBOYS (3-3)

Sunday, Oct. 29 | 4:25 p.m. ET
FedExField (82,000) | Landover, Md.

REDSKINS AWAIT RIVAL COWBOYS IN WEEK 8

The Washington Redskins will face an NFC East rival for a second straight week when the team hosts the Dallas Cowboys at FedExField in Week 8. Kickoff on Sunday is scheduled for 4:25 p.m. ET.

The Redskins will return home this week hoping to sustain and extend the success they've enjoyed early in games so far this season. In each of their last five games, the Redskins have scored points on their first drive and held opponents scoreless on their opening possession. The Redskins have outscored opponents by 23 points in the first quarter this year, the second-best margin in the NFL (Philadelphia, +35).

Sunday's game will be the centerpiece of the Redskins' annual Alumni Homecoming Weekend. This year, not including coaches and football staff, players expected to be in attendance for various elements of this weekend account for more than 600 combined seasons of Redskins playing experience, 108 combined Super Bowl appearances and 67 combined Super Bowl titles, including 31 members of the 80 Greatest Redskins, 21 members of the Redskins Ring of Fame and five members of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Alumni Homecoming Weekend

* Subject to Flexible Scheduling
Nationally televised

ALUMNI CENTER

Formally organized in 1958, the Washington Redskins Alumni Association was the first organization of its kind in the country. The organization spearheaded the alumni movement among former professional football players and was the model for other alumni groups that later formed in all NFL cities. Now entering its 59th year, the Alumni Association continues to celebrate those who have contributed to more than eight decades of Redskins football dating back to the team's inception in 1932.

The primary objectives of the Redskins Alumni are promoting a continuing interest in current and past players of the Washington Redskins, as well as promoting and fostering interest and funding for charitable purposes. With respect to the latter, the alumni conduct fundraising events to raise money that can be donated to charitable organizations or used in other ways to help improve the quality of life for youth in the Greater Washington community.

Today, Redskins alumni continue to make their presence known throughout the community. As a very active chapter of the NFL Alumni Association, their motto is "Caring for Kids." In addition to the numerous events and appearances Redskins Alumni participate in throughout the year, they hold two major fundraising events of their own — the Redskins Alumni Charity Golf Classic, in its 39th year in 2017, and the annual Washington Redskins Welcome Home Luncheon, which will mark its 56th year in 2017.

The alumni have an office at Inova Sports Performance Center at Redskins Park and can be reached at 703-726-7488. Since his arrival in Washington in December of 2009, President Bruce Allen has made it a priority to build a bridge to the franchise's historic past. Throughout the 2012 offseason, the Redskins traversed the Washington D.C./Maryland/Virginia area as part of the team's 'Thank You Tour,' which brought players, coaches, alumni, cheerleaders, team officials and more to fans throughout the entire region to help celebrate the team's historic heritage. The team will be celebrating its 85th anniversary in 2017, including the establishment of the "Hall of Fans" that will include a documentary film highlighting the loyalty and passion of Redskins fans over the years.

The Redskins and their alumni boast a storied tradition of both team and individual success. As of the start of the 2017 season, 116 different members of the burgundy and gold have accounted for 239 total Pro Bowl selections since the game's inception following the 1950 campaign. Those honored members were parts of Redskins teams that have helped the organization become one of only five NFL franchises to record 600 all-time victories, including postseason play. The organization has won five World Championships, including three Super Bowl titles in which Pro Football Hall of Famer Joe Gibbs became the only head coach in NFL history to win three Super Bowls with three different starting quarterbacks (Joe Theismann, Doug Williams and Mark Rypien. In total, the Redskins' legacy includes 19 members of the Pro Football Hall of Fame plus 11 others who spent time with the organization, as well as four AP NFL Coaches of the Year honors for three different coaches since the award began in 1957 (George Allen, 1971; Jack Pardee, 1979; Joe Gibbs, 1982-83).

On Wednesday, Aug. 30, the Washington Redskins Charitable Foundation and Redskins Alumni Association once again honored the franchise's past and present, hosting the 56th annual Welcome Home Luncheon at the Hilton McLean in Tyson's Corner. The annual event celebrates the burgundy and gold and kicks off each football season with Redskins players, coaches and alumni.

The Redskins Welcome Home Luncheon is typically the only annual event where fans and corporate partners have the chance to spend time with the entire Redskins team. Each table is usually guaranteed at least one player or coach seated with the attendees. Proceeds from the event benefit the youth programs of the Washington Redskins Charitable Foundation and Redskins Alumni Association.

This year, the Redskins used the event to honor their players for contributions both on and off the field. Quarterback Kirk Cousins earned 2016 Bobby Mitchell Offensive Player of the Year honors presented by MGM, linebacker Ryan Kerrigan earned 2016 Sam Huff Defensive Player of the Year honors presented by WashingtonFirst Bank and punt returner Jamison Crowder received 2016 Mark Moseley Special Teams Player of the Year Award presented by Five Guys. Other presented awards included the Redskins Salute Award presented to tight end Vernon Davis by The GCO Consulting Group for his efforts with the military.

Also among the Redskins Alumni Association's premier events is the team's annual Alumni Homecoming celebration, which the Redskins will host against the Dallas Cowboys this week. Not including staff and coaches, players expected to attend this weekend represent more than 600 combined seasons of Redskins playing experience, 108 combined Super Bowl appearances and 67 combined Super Bowl titles, including 31 members of the 80 Greatest Redskins, 21 members of the Redskins Ring of Fame and five members of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

A year ago, the Redskins used their 2016 Alumni Homecoming weekend to honor former General Manager Bobby Beathard with induction in the Ring of Fame. The honor was announced by President Bruce Allen during training camp at the Bon Secours Washington Redskins Training Center in Richmond.

Beathard's illustrious career as an NFL executive included 11 seasons as General Manager of the Redskins from 1978-88. After taking the job on Feb. 24, 1978, Beathard guided the organization to three Super Bowl appearances, including victories in Super Bowls XVII and XXII. Many of the players he acquired remained on the roster for the team's Super Bowl XXVI victory as well.

In Beathard's 11 seasons as General Manager, the Redskins averaged 9.5 wins a year. The team posted a regular season winning percentage of .625 (105-63) in that time frame, best in the NFC and second-best in the NFL. No team in that time frame posted a better postseason winning percentage than the Redskins, who went 11-3 in postseason play in his tenure for a winning percentage of .786.

"This is a wonderful occasion for us, and a real honor to be brought back here by Bruce and Dan," Beathard said in August. "Of all the years I was in the NFL, this organization has been the most supportive and the most fun. I've never been with an organization who has done this much for the people in it at present and the people who were in it in the past."

WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP LEGACY

The Washington Redskins' five World Championships are tied for fifth-most in NFL history.

» Brown attempting to become the first member of the Redskins to post at least 1.5 sacks in back-to-back games since Brian Orakpo in Weeks 9-10 of the 2009 season.

» Quarterback Kirk Cousins starting his 39th consecutive regular season game for the Redskins, already the third-longest streak by a Redskins quarterback since the 1970 AFL-NFL merger behind Joe Theismann (60 from 1980-84) and Mark Rypien (41 from 1990-93).

» Cousins entering the game second in NFL history in completion percentage (66.1) among players with at least 1,500 career attempts.

» Cousins adding to his team records for career 300-yard passing games (22, including 21 in regular season play) and 400-yard passing games (three).

» Cousins throwing for 300 yards in three consecutive games for the second time in his career and the first time since Weeks 14-16 of the 2015 season.

» Cousins amassing 300 passing yards to tie the team record for consecutive 300-yard passing games (three, Cousins in 2015 and Robert Griffin III in 2013).

» Cousins becoming the first Redskins quarterback to post three consecutive 300-yard passing games twice in a career.

» Cousins finishing a fifth consecutive regular season game with a passer rating of 100.0 or better for the first time since a six-game streak in Weeks 12-17 of the 2015 season.

» Cousins throwing multiple touchdown passes in five consecutive games for the first time in his career.

» Cousins becoming the first Redskins quarterback to post five straight contests with multiple touchdown passes since Mark Brunell in 2005.

» Cousins throwing three touchdown passes in consecutive games for the first time since Weeks 11-12 of the 2016 season.

» Cousins posting his 13th career game with three or more passing touchdowns to tie Mark Rypien for fourth-most by a Redskins quarterback since 1960.

» Cousins (1,754) attempting 38 passes to move past Billy Kilmer (1,791) for the fifth-most career passing attempts in Redskins history.

» Cousins (10) rushing for a touchdown to pass Sonny Jurgensen (10) for sole possession of the second-most career rushing touchdowns by a Redskins quarterback.

» Cousins adding to his single-season career-high 121 rushing yards this year.

» Jamison Crowder (one) returning a punt for a touchdown to become the eighth Redskins player to record multiple career punt return touchdowns, joining Brian Mitchell, Rickie Harris, Dick Todd, Bert Zagers, Cliff Battles, Mike Nelms and Johnny Williams.

» Tight end Vernon Davis (6,716) gaining 26 receiving yards to move past Kellen Winslow (6,741) for the ninth-most career receiving yards by a tight end in NFL history.

» Davis (58) chasing former Redskins great Jerry Smith (60) for seventh on the list of career touchdown receptions by a tight end in NFL history.

» Davis recording a reception of 30 or more yards in four consecutive games for the first time in his 12-year career.

» Cornerback Quinton Dunbar intercepting a pass in back-to-back games for the first time in his career.

» Dunbar attempting to become the first member of the Redskins with an interception in back-to-back games since Bashaud Breeland in Weeks 5-6 of the 2015 season.

» Dunbar adding to his three career interceptions, all of which have come in NFC East play.

» Wide receiver Ryan Grant (two) setting a single-season career high with his next touchdown reception (two in 2015 and 2017).

» Linebacker Ryan Kerrigan starting his 103rd consecutive regular season game, the longest active streak among active NFL linebackers. Kerrigan has not missed a start in his NFL career.

» Kerrigan recording his fourth career interception return touchdown to take sole possession of second-most in franchise history. He is currently tied with DeAngelo Hall, Monte Coleman, Andre Collins, Brig Owens and Mike Bass (three each).

» Defensive lineman Matt Ioannidis adding to his career-high 3.5 sacks.

» Ioannidis (3.5) recording 2.5 sacks to tie Chris Baker (6.0 in 2015) and Stephen Bowen (6.0 in 2011) for the most sacks in a season by a Redskins defensive lineman since the team's transition to a 3-4 base in 2010.

» Tight end Jordan Reed entering the contest with 19 receiving touchdowns since 2015, the most by any NFL tight end in that time frame.

» Reed catching a touchdown pass in consecutive games for this first time this season and the first time since a three-game stretch in Weeks 14-16 in 2015.

» Reed registering multiple touchdown receptions in back-to-back games for the second time in his career and the first time since Weeks 15-16 in 2015.

» Reed (seven) scoring multiple receiving touchdowns to tie Gary Clark (eight) for fifth-most games with multiple touchdown receptions by a member of the Redskins since 1960.

» Reed (2,808) gaining 122 receiving yards to pass Bill Anderson (2,929) for the third-most career receiving yards by a tight end in Redskins history.

» Reed (2,808) gaining 192 receiving yards to join Jerry Smith and Chris Cooley as the only tight ends to record 3,000 career receiving yards as a member of the Redskins.

» Linebacker Preston Smith adding to his 4.5 sacks this season. Through six games, Smith has already matched his full-season output from 2016.

» Running back Chris Thompson entering the game as the only player in the NFL to lead a team in both rushing yards (213) and receiving yards (366) this season.

» Thompson entering the game with 366 receiving yards, the seventh-most by an NFL running back through the first six games of a season since the turn of the century.

» Thompson (two in 2017) attempting to break a tie for the most 100-yard receiving games by a Redskins running back in a season in records dating back to 1960 (Dick James, two in 1962).

» Thompson (two) breaking a tie with Dick James, Craig McEwen and Larry Brown (two each) for the most career 100-yard receiving games by a Redskins running back in records dating back to 1960.

» Thompson adding to his career highs in receiving yards (366) and receiving touchdowns (three) this season.

» Thompson (982) gaining 18 receiving yards to become the 22nd back in Redskins history to record 1,000 career receiving yards with the team.

» Thompson scoring a receiving touchdown in back-to-back games for the first time in his career.

» Thompson (three) becoming the first Redskins back to catch at least four touchdown passes in a season since fullback Mike Sellers (seven) in 2005.

» Thompson (eight) catching two touchdown passes to tie Joe Washington (10) for 10th-most career receiving touchdown by a back in Redskins history.

HEAD COACH JAY GRUDEN

Jay Gruden enters his fourth season with the Washington Redskins in 2017 after being named the 29th head coach in franchise history on January 9, 2014.

Previously a decorated quarterback in the college and Arena Football League ranks and a successful NFL assistant, Gruden has showcased his offensive acumen honed from his diverse football background throughout his tenure with the Redskins.

In 2016, Gruden guided the Redskins to an 8-7-1 record, giving the franchise back-to-back winning seasons for the first time since 1996-97. The team was led by Gruden's record-shattering offense, which posted team records in total net yards (6,545), net passing yards (4,758) and yards per play (6.40), ranking in the Top 3 in the NFL in all three categories.

Gruden's offense — once called “easily one of the three or four best designed offenses in the NFL” by Andy Benoit of The MMQB — was more than just historically efficient and explosive that season. The distribution of the offensive contributions allowed eight Redskins players (DeSean Jackson, Pierre Garçon, Jamison Crowder, Rob Kelley, Chris Thompson, Jordan Reed, Vernon Davis and Matt Jones) to finish the season with at least 500 yards from scrimmage, tying the 2011 New Orleans Saints for the most in a single season in NFL history.

A year earlier, Gruden led the Redskins to an NFC East Championship in 2015, posting a 9-7 record to complete the second “worst-to-first” turnaround in team history. Gruden became the sixth coach in team history to lead the Redskins to a playoff berth within the first two years at the helm, joining Ray Flaherty, Dutch Bergman, Dudley DeGroot, George Allen and Joe Gibbs.

Under Gruden's guidance, the 2015 Redskins featured what was at the time the most prolific passing attack in franchise history. Quarterback Kirk Cousins, named the starter in the middle of the preseason, set then-single-season team records for attempts (543), completions (379), passing yards (4,166) and 300-yard passing games (seven) while throwing 29 touchdown passes, including at least one in all 16 games. Cousins' success coincided with the emergence of tight end Jordan Reed, who finished the season with 87 receptions for 952 yards (both team records for a tight end) with 11 receiving touchdowns.

Gruden assumed control of the Redskins in 2014 and guided the team through a campaign in which three different quarterbacks (Robert Griffin III, Kirk Cousins and Colt McCoy) recorded victories as starters. He installed an offensive system that produced two Pro Bowlers in his first season (tackle Trent Williams and running back Alfred Morris).

Excluding interim coaches, Gruden, 46 at the time of his hiring, became the team's youngest head coaching hire since hiring eventual Pro Football Hall of Famer Joe Gibbs at 40 years of age in 1981. He became the first Redskins head coach hired directly from an offensive coordinator role on another team since Norv Turner in 1994.

Before joining the Redskins, Gruden spent his previous three seasons as offensive coordinator for the Cincinnati Bengals. In his tenure in Cincinnati, the Bengals averaged 10 wins a season, making three consecutive playoff appearances and earning an AFC North championship in 2013. Members of the Bengals' offense accounted for seven Pro Bowl selections in his three seasons in Cincinnati.

Gruden was tasked with the development of quarterback Andy Dalton, a 2011 second-round pick. In three seasons together, Gruden helped Dalton to a 30-18 regular season record as a starter (.625), as Dalton's 30 wins in that time frame ranked tied for fifth-most among NFL quarterbacks. Dalton's 80 passing touchdowns ranked third-most in NFL history for a quarterback in his first three seasons, trailing only Dan Marino (98) and Peyton Manning (85).

Prior to joining the Bengals, Gruden served two years with the Florida Tuskers of the United Football League from 2009-10. In 2009, Gruden served as offensive coordinator as the Tuskers compiled a 6-0 regular season record and earned a UFL championship game berth. In 2010, he assumed the roles of head coach and general manager and led the Tuskers to their second consecutive championship game appearance.

Gruden coached for seven seasons (2002-08) with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, earning a Super Bowl championship ring as an offensive assistant in 2002. There he worked under his brother, Jon (then the Bucs' head coach), and current Redskins President Bruce Allen (the Bucs' general manager from 2004-08). Gruden helped guide the Buccaneers to the team's first championship, a 48-21 victory in Super Bowl XXXVII.

Gruden also ranks among the most outstanding players and coaches in the history of the Arena Football League, having won six combined league championships — four as a quarterback and two as a head coach. Gruden played quarterback (2002-03) and served as head coach (2004-08) of the AFL's Orlando Predators while simultaneously working as an offensive assistant with the Buccaneers. In all, Gruden served as head coach of the Predators for nine seasons (1998-2001 and 2004-08), leading the Predators to four championship game appearances and two league titles as a coach. During a two-year hiatus from coaching the Predators in 2002-03, he returned to the playing field as Orlando's quarterback, leading the Predators to playoff appearances in both seasons.

In his eight seasons as a player in the AFL, Gruden completed 1,673-of-2,775 passes (60.3 percent) for 21,578 yards with 398 touchdowns and 99 interceptions. In addition to his time with Orlando, he spent six seasons (1991-96) at quarterback for the Tampa Bay Storm, winning four AFL titles and being named MVP of ArenaBowl VII in 1993. He was also named the 1992 AFL Most Valuable Player and was honored with induction into the AFL Hall of Fame in 1999.

Gruden played quarterback for four seasons for former Redskins draft pick Howard Schnellenberger at the University of Louisville (1985-88) and was a two-time team MVP.

Gruden was born March 4, 1967, in Tiffin, Ohio. He and his wife, Sherry, have three sons — J.J., Joey and Jack — and a grandson, Trey.

NOTES FROM LAST GAME

» The Washington Redskins fell to the Philadelphia Eagles, 34-24, in front of an announced crowd of 69,596 people at Lincoln Financial Field on Monday.

» The Redskins now sit at 3-3 this season.

» The Redskins gained 344 yards of offense. The Redskins have now hit the 325-yard mark on offense in five straight games for the first time since a 10-game stretch in Weeks 6-16 of the 2016 season.

» The Redskins reached 300 yards of offense for a fifth consecutive game.

» Quarterback Kirk Cousins completed 30-of-40 passes for 303 yards with three touchdowns and one interception for a passer rating of 110.7.

» Cousins also rushed for 18 yards, pushing his single-season career-high in rushing yards to 121 this year.

» Cousins added to his team record for career 300-yard passing games (22, including 21 in regular season play).

» Cousins has now thrown for 300 yards in consecutive games for the first time since Weeks 11-12 of the 2016 season.

» Cousins has now finished four consecutive games with a passer rating of 100.0 or better for the first time since a six-game regular season streak in Weeks 12-17 of the 2015 season.

» Cousins has now thrown multiple touchdown passes in four consecutive games for the first time since Weeks 8-12 of the 2016 season.

» Cousins' 30 completions were a season high, and his 40 attempts were his most since Week 15 of the 2016 season vs. Carolina.

» Cousins started his 38th consecutive regular season game for the Redskins, already the third-longest streak by a Redskins quarterback since the 1970 AFL-NFL merger behind Joe Theismann (60 from 1980-84) and Mark Rypien (41 from 1990-93).

» Tight end Jordan Reed posted season highs in receptions (eight) and receiving yards (64) and tied his career high with two receiving touchdowns.

» Reed recorded his first touchdown reception of the season in the third quarter on a five-yard touchdown pass from Cousins. He later added another score on a 12-yard pass from Cousins in the second quarter.

» With his two touchdowns, Reed (22) passed Jean Fugett (21) for third-most career receiving touchdowns by a tight end in Redskins history. He now trails only Jerry Smith (60) and Chris Cooley (33) among tight ends in team history.

» The second touchdown reception was Reed's 19th since the start of the 2015 season, surpassing Cincinnati's Tyler Eifert and New England's Rob Gronkowski (18 each) for the most by any NFL tight end in that time frame.

» The multi-touchdown game was Reed's first since Week 12 of the 2016 season at Dallas.

» Reed now has seven career games with multiple touchdown receptions, one shy of Gary Clark for fifth-most by a member of the Redskins since 1960.

» Running back Chris Thompson rushed for a team-high 38 yards on seven carries and added five receptions for 26 yards with a receiving touchdown.

» With the receiving performance, Thompson (366) broke his single-season career high in receiving yards (349 in 2016).

» Thompson scored the game's first touchdown on a seven-yard pass from Cousins in the second quarter.

» The score was Thompson's third touchdown reception of the season, breaking his current single-season career high (two each in the 2015-17 seasons).

» Thompson became the first Redskins back to catch at least three touchdown passes in a season since fullback Mike Sellers (seven) in 2005.

» The passing touchdown to Thompson was Cousins' 10th passing touchdown of the season. Cousins became the seventh Redskins quarterback to record at least four consecutive 10-touchdown passing seasons, joining Sonny Jurgensen (seven, 1964-70), Joe Theismann (seven, 1978-84), Billy Kilmer (six, 1971-76), Mark Rypien (five, 1988-92), Jason Campbell (four, 2006-09) and Sammy Baugh (four, twice, 1940-43 and 1947-50).

» Cousins has thrown a touchdown pass in every game this season and has now thrown a touchdown pass in eight consecutive games, dating back to last season.

» Tight end Vernon Davis recorded four receptions for 67 yards.

» Davis recorded a 31-yard reception in the first quarter, giving him a catch of 30 or more yards in three straight games for the first time since Weeks 11-13 of the 2009 season as a member of the San Francisco 49ers.

» Tight end Niles Paul caught a 32-yard pass in the first quarter, his longest reception since a 50-yard gain in Week 7 of the 2014 season vs. Tennessee.

» Wide receiver Josh Doctson recorded a career-high three receptions, gaining 39 yards.

» Linebacker Ryan Kerrigan started his 102nd consecutive regular season game, the longest active streak among active NFL linebackers. Kerrigan has not missed a start in his NFL career.

» Kerrigan and linebacker Junior Galette split a sack in the first quarter.

- » Linebackers Mason Foster and Zach Brown split a second-quarter sack, each player's first half-sack of the year.
- » Brown's half-sack was his first as member of the Redskins.
- » Brown later added a full sack and his first forced fumble in the second quarter. The forced fumble was Brown's first since Week 4 of the 2016 season as a member of the Buffalo Bills.
- » The multi-sack game was Brown's first since Week 1 of the 2013 season as a member of the Tennessee Titans.
- » The Redskins have now recorded a sack in a 30 consecutive regular season games, dating back to 2015. With Cincinnati's 34-game sack streak getting snapped in Week 7, Washington's active streak of 30 games is now the longest in the NFL.
- » With a sack in their 30th consecutive regular season game, the Redskins tied for the second-longest sack streak in team history since the NFL adopted sacks as an official statistic in 1982 (Weeks 15 in 2008 through Week 12 in 2010).
- » The Redskins finished the game with three sacks and have now posted three or more sacks in four consecutive games for the first time since a five-game stretch in Weeks 5-10 of the 2016 season.
- » Cornerback Quinton Dunbar recorded his first interception of the season – the third of his career – on the Eagles' first possession, picking off Eagles quarterback Carson Wentz.
- » All three of Dunbar's career interceptions have come in NFC East play.
- » Dunbar's interception gave the Redskins an interception on an opponent's opening drive for the second time this season (Week 3, Montae Nicholson vs. Oakland).
- » Kicker Nick Rose made his NFL debut and converted his first career field goal attempt, a 27-yarder on the Redskins' opening drive.
- » With Rose's opening drive field goal, the Redskins have now recorded points on their initial possession of five consecutive games for the first time in records dating back to 1999.
- » The Redskins held the Eagles scoreless in the first quarter. The Eagles entered the game leading the NFL with a +38 scoring differential in the first quarter.
- » The Redskins made their second of two appearances on ESPN's Monday Night Football in 2017. The 2017 season marks the 24th time that the Redskins have made multiple appearances on Monday Night Football since the program's inception in 1970.
- » The Redskins logged their 70th all-time appearance on Monday Night Football since 1970. The appearance tied the Redskins with the Denver Broncos for fourth-most by any team in the program's history.
- » The Redskins and Eagles faced one another on Monday Night Football for the ninth time in series history.
- » Head Coach Jay Gruden issued his first replay challenge of the season in the second quarter. Gruden and the Redskins' successfully challenged the call, ruling the receiver down by contact

THE OPPONENT

The Dallas Cowboys enter Week 8 with a 3-3 record and in second place in the NFC East. This season is the team's eighth season under the purview of Head Coach Jason Garrett.

Dak Prescott is the team's starter at quarterback in his second NFL season. This season, he has completed 128-of-204 passes (62.7 percent) for 1,426 yards with 14 touchdowns and four interceptions. Prescott's 14 touchdown passes rank fifth in the NFL.

Running back Ezekiel Elliott leads the Cowboys in rushing this year, having posted 540 rushing yards on 131 carries including four rushing touchdowns. Former Redskins running back Alfred Morris has also added 102 rushing yards on 10 carries.

Wide receiver Dez Bryant leads the team in receiving yards (327) and receiving touchdowns (four). Tight end Jason Witten leads the team in receptions (31) and has contributed three receiving touchdowns.

Linebacker Jaylon Smith has posted a team-high 44 tackles (23 solo) for the Cowboys through six games. Defensive end Demarcus Lawrence has a team-high 9.5 sacks, while cornerback Jourdan Lewis and cornerback Anthony Brown are tied for the team lead in interceptions (one each).

Dan Bailey has handled the bulk of place kicking duties for the Cowboys this season, while Chris Jones handles the punting responsibilities. Prior to his injury last week, Bailey was 7-of-7 (100 percent) on field goal attempts this season. He is also 16-of-16 on PATs. Jones is averaging 44.3 yards per punt.

Ryan Switzer has been the team's primary punt returner and kick returner in 2017. Switzer has averaged 6.8 yards on nine punt returns. He is also averaging 23.3 yards on seven kick returns.

JASON GARRETT

Jason Garrett was named the eighth head coach in Dallas Cowboys history on January 5, 2011. Garrett became the first former Dallas Cowboys player to become the team's head coach. In five and a half years as head coach, Garrett owns a 46-44 overall record, including playoffs.

As a player in Dallas, Garrett served as a backup to Troy Aikman in offenses directed by Norv Turner and Ernie Zampese. He went on to play for the New York Giants, who reached Super Bowl XXXV, while playing for offensive coordinator Sean Payton. Garrett finished his playing days while studying under Jon Gruden in Tampa Bay.

Garrett guided the 2014 squad to an NFL-best tying 12-4 record, the club's 22nd Division title - 18th NFC East title - 31st postseason appearance and 34th playoff win. For the season, the Dallas offense totaled 6,138 yards for the second-highest figure in franchise history. The club also had eight players selected to the Pro Bowl. Following the season, Garrett was rewarded for the team's accomplishments with a five-year contract extension.

In 2013, Garrett guided the Cowboys to an 8-8 record and had his club in position to play for the NFC East title in the last game of the regular season for the third straight year. Five of the team's eight losses came by a combined total of eight points as the Cowboys finished in second place in the NFC East.

In his first full year as head coach, Garrett guided the 2011 team to an 8-8 finish as the offense amassed 6,008 yards for the second-highest yardage output in franchise history. Garrett took over as the team's interim head coach at the midpoint of the 2010 season.

Garrett returned to Dallas in 2007 as the offensive coordinator after spending two seasons tutoring the Miami Dolphins quarterbacks. The unit finished among the NFL's top-10 in total offense in five of his seven years at the helm: 2013 (10th), 2012 (6th), 2010 (10th), 2009 (2nd) and 2007 (2nd).

Garrett concluded his playing career by splitting the 2004 season with Tampa Bay and Miami and entered the coaching profession in February of 2005 as the quarterbacks coach for Nick Saban's first Miami Dolphins club. While in Miami, Garrett handled the challenge of having to work with five different starting quarterbacks over the course of 32 regular season games.

Garrett earned his degree from Princeton in history in 1989, and moved on to the NFL as an undrafted rookie free agent with the New Orleans Saints developmental squad. After being released prior to the 1990 season, he spent the fall of 1990 as an assistant coach at Princeton. In 1991 Garrett moved on to play in the World League and the Canadian Football League before joining the Cowboys practice squad in 1992.

Jason and his wife founded their charitable foundation, Jason Garrett Starfish Charities, in 1997 with the goal of enriching the lives of young people. The principle activity of the foundation is a one-day football camp and leadership forum for high school athletes, which is held each summer at Princeton.

Born on March 28, 1966, Garrett resides in Dallas with his wife, Brill.

SERIES HISTORY

Sunday's matchup between the Redskins and Cowboys will mark the 115th overall meeting between the division rivals. It will be the 113th regular season meeting between the two franchises.

The Redskins trail the all-time regular season series, 42-68-2. Washington won both of the teams' postseason meetings, including victories in the 1972 and 1982 NFC Championship games.

The Redskins and Cowboys have played particularly close contests in recent years. Ten of the teams' 14 meetings since 2010 have been decided by seven or fewer points, including both games between the two franchises last season.

Included below are the 114 previous games contested between the Redskins and Cowboys:

SACK STREAK

The Redskins have recorded a sack in 30 consecutive regular season games, tied for the second-longest streak by the team since the NFL adopted sacks as an official statistic in 1982.

CONSECUTIVE GAMES WITH A SACK [REDSKINS, REGULAR SEASON GAMES SINCE 1982]:

| Streak Start/End | Games |
|--------------------------------------|-----------|
| 1. Week 2 [1984] – Week 14 [1987] | 60 |
| 2t. Week 10 [2015] – Present | 30 |
| 2t. Week 15 [2008] – Week 12 [2010] | 30 |
| 4. Week 1 [1982] – Week 16 [1983] | 25 |
| 5. Week 15 [1995] – Week 5 [1997] | 23 |
| 6. Week 11 [2012] – Week 13 [2013] | 19 |
| 7. Week 7 [1988] – Week 7 [1989] | 17 |
| 8t. Week 15 [2006] – Week 12 [2007] | 14 |
| 8t. Week 9 [1998] – Week 6 [1999] | 14 |

| 10t. Week 12 [1990] – Week 7 [1991] | 13 |

With Cincinnati's 34-game streak coming to an end in Week 7, the Redskins' current 30-game regular season sack streak is now the longest active streak in the NFL.

CONSECUTIVE GAMES WITH A SACK [ACTIVE STREAKS, NFL]:

| Team | Games |
|-------------------------------|-----------|
| 1. Washington Redskins | 30 |
| 2. Arizona Cardinals | 27 |
| 3. Carolina Panthers | 25 |
| 4t. New Orleans Saints | 16 |
| 4t. Pittsburgh Steelers | 16 |

FORCING FUMBLES

Aided in part by a league-best 21 defensive forced fumbles in 2015 and the addition of Josh Norman and his co-opted "Peanut Punch" in 2016, the Redskins are among the league leaders in defensive forced fumbles since the start of the 2015 campaign.

DEFENSIVE FORCED FUMBLES SINCE 2015:

| Team | FF |
|-------------------------------|-----------|
| 1. Carolina Panthers | 42 |
| 2. Washington Redskins | 41 |
| 3. Tampa Bay Buccaneers | 40 |
| 4. Arizona Cardinals | 38 |

| 6t. Oakland Raiders | 36 |
| 6t. Los Angeles Rams | 36 |
| 6t. New York Giants | 36 |
| 9. New Orleans Saints | 35 |
| 10t. Two teams tied | 34 |

PASSING YARDS PER PLAY

After much local and national consternation about the explosiveness of the Redskins' offense after the departure of two 1,000-yard receivers this past offseason, it appears rumors of the demise of the Redskins' explosive passing attack were greatly exaggerated.

The Redskins rank fourth in the NFL in net passing yards per passing play this season.

NET PASSING YARDS PER PASSING PLAY (NFL, 2017):

| Team | Net Yds. | Plays | Yds/Play |
|-------------------------------|--------------|------------|-------------|
| 1. New England Patriots | 2,100 | 280 | 7.50 |
| 2. Tampa Bay Buccaneers | 1,874 | 251 | 7.47 |
| 3. Kansas City Chiefs | 1,844 | 249 | 7.41 |
| 4. Washington Redskins | 1,526 | 210 | 7.27 |
| 5. Los Angeles Rams | 1,691 | 234 | 7.23 |

OFFENSIVE THREE-AND-OUTS

After recording three-and-outs on 22.9 percent of offensive possessions in Head Coach Jay Gruden's first two seasons from 2014-15, the Redskins have been one of the NFL's best at avoiding those momentum-killing drives in the last few seasons.

This year, the Redskins have been held to three-and-outs on only 11 of their 67 offensive possessions. Their three-and-out percentage of 16.4 percent ranks third in the NFL.

THREE-AND-OUT DRIVES (NFL, 2017):

| Team | Drives | 3 & Outs | Pct. |
|-------------------------------|-----------|-----------|-------------|
| 1. Pittsburgh Steelers | 78 | 11 | 14.1 |
| 2. Dallas Cowboys | 65 | 10 | 15.4 |
| 3. Washington Redskins | 67 | 11 | 16.4 |
| 4. Philadelphia Eagles | 81 | 14 | 17.3 |
| 5. Minnesota Vikings | 78 | 14 | 17.9 |

A year ago, defenses limited the Redskins to only 25 three-and-outs in the Redskins' 175 offensive possessions in 2016. At their current pace, the Redskins will have recorded their top two seasons in terms of three-and-out percentage since 2000 in the last two years.

PCT. OF THREE-AND-OUT DRIVES (REDSKINS SINCE 2000):

| Team | Drives | 3 & Outs | Pct. |
|-------------------------|-----------|-----------|-------------|
| 1. 2016 Redskins | 162 | 20 | 12.3 |
| 2. 2017 Redskins | 67 | 11 | 16.4 |
| 2. 2011 Redskins | 189 | 33 | 17.5 |
| 3. 2012 Redskins | 185 | 36 | 19.5 |
| 4. 2002 Redskins | 198 | 40 | 20.2 |

THIRD AND LONG OFFENSE

Though all NFL teams preach the importance of staying out of third-and-long situations, the Redskins have been able to escape such situations at an impressive rate in 2017. The Redskins have converted 46.7 percent of third downs with six or more yards to go.

THIRD-AND-6+ CONVERSION PERCENTAGE (NFL, 2017):

| Team | Att. | Conv. | Pct. |
|-------------------------------|-----------|-----------|-------------|
| 1. Washington Redskins | 30 | 14 | 46.7 |

RECEIVING AVERAGE

Wide receiver DeSean Jackson led the NFL in receiving average in 2014 with a 20.9-yard-per-catch average. When he departed the Redskins in free agency in 2017, many wondered who might replace his explosiveness in the Redskins' offense.

Just like everyone expected, the answer has been a 33-year-old tight end on his third team in three years. Vernon Davis, the "Ageless Wonder," leads the NFL in yards per catch through seven weeks.

PASS PROTECTION

The Redskins allowed only 23 sacks in 2016, including four sack-free games. The Redskins have continued a trend of stout pass protection dating back to the hire of Offensive Line Coach Bill Callahan prior to the 2015 season.

SACKS ALLOWED SINCE 2015:

DIVISION PARITY

Parity has been a topic de jour in the National Football League in recent years, and the league-wide trends provide the evidence. Each year since the 12-team playoff format was adopted in 1990, at least four teams have qualified for the playoffs after missing the postseason the year before.

No division has seen more turnover at the top in recent years than the NFC East, which is only division to have all four teams win at least one division title within the last six seasons.

12 YEARS, NO NFC EAST REPEATS

While there's little common ground among fans of the Redskins, Giants and Eagles, they'll all enter 2017 with the common goal of having their teams dethrone the 2016 division champion Cowboys. No division has been more hotly contested than the NFC East in recent years, as no team has been able to repeat as division champion in the last 12 seasons.

STARTING STRONG

Entering Week 7, the Redskins have scored points on the first possession of each of their last five games for the first time in records dating back to 1999 and rank third in the NFL on such drives.

POINTS ON FIRST OFFENSIVE POSSESSION (NFL, 2017):

| Team | Points |
|-------------------------------|-----------|
| 1. Green Bay Packers | 34 |
| 2. Jacksonville Jaguars | 30 |
| 3. Washington Redskins | 27 |
| 4. Philadelphia Eagles | 24 |
| 5. New England Patriots | 23 |

Conversely, the Redskins' defense has held opponents to only seven opening-drive points. Here's how opponents have fared against Washington on their opening drives this season:

OPPONENTS' FIRST OFFENSIVE POSSESSIONS (REDSKINS, 2017):

| Game | Plays | Yds | Time | Result |
|-------------------|-------|-----|------|--------------|
| vs. Philadelphia | 3 | 56 | 1:07 | Touchdown |
| at LA Rams | 6 | 21 | 2:53 | Punt |
| vs. Oakland | 2 | 3 | 0:48 | Interception |
| at Kansas City | 3 | -7 | 1:26 | Punt |
| vs. San Francisco | 5 | 9 | 2:23 | Punt |
| at Philadelphia | 3 | 5 | 2:39 | Interception |

'D' IS BACK IN D.C.

The Redskins' defense was beleaguered in much of 2016, a season in which the team allowed an average of 377.9 yards per game and ranked 28th in the NFL. Now under the guidance of Defensive Coordinator Greg Manusky and featuring a number of new additions from both free agency and the draft, the Redskins' defense appears intent on making a quick turnaround.

The Redskins rank in the Top 12 in the NFL in a number of key defensive categories.

| Category | No. | NFL Rank | NFC Rank |
|---------------------------|-------|----------|----------|
| Yardage Differential/Game | +44.0 | 9 | 6 |
| Rushing Yards/Game | 94.5 | 9 | 5 |
| Sacks/Pass Attempt | 8.82 | 9 | 5 |
| Interception Rate | 8.94 | 10 | 4 |
| Total Yards/Game | 325.2 | 12 | 5 |

RUN DEFENSE

Currently, the Redskins' revamped defense is allowing 94.5 rushing yards per game. The Redskins are currently on pace to hold teams under 100 rushing yards per game for the first time in a decade.

RUSHING YARDS PER GAME, REDSKINS, LAST 10 YEARS:

| Team | Rush YPG |

FLIGHT MARSHALS

In 2016, the Redskins made a major splash in their secondary, adding free agent Josh Norman to the group. A year later, the unit found additional leadership in both the coaching and player ranks.

In January, the Redskins named Torrian Gray as the team's Defensive Backs Coach after he spent the last 11 seasons producing NFL defensive backs at Virginia Tech (2006-15) and Florida (2016). Two months later, the Redskins signed safety D.J. Swearingen on the first day of unrestricted free agency. Swearingen's swagger and Gray's emphasis on technique have brought new life to a unit that has dubbed itself the "Flight Marshals."

"We control everything in the air, man," Swearingen told The Washington Post. "Like we say, man, we're going to get on this flight, it's going to be a long flight, we're going to keep everybody in their seat belts and we're going to keep the red light on. The wide receivers, you gotta stay in your seat belt."

The unit's signature celebration was on display against the 49ers in Week 6. After cornerback Kendall Fuller pulled in a game-sealing interception with three seconds remaining, Swearingen and his Flight Marshal teammates surrounded Fuller and mimed a security screening/frisking.

No matter the nickname, Swearingen's impact has been immediately felt by Redskins coaches and players. He was named the team's defensive captain prior to ever stepping foot on the field for the Redskins in a regular season game. It was proof that Swearingen's teammates believed he could back up his reputation for trash talk with a reputation for stellar play.

"It's one thing being a vocal guy, but you have to back it up with production and sound play and know what you are talking about. I've had guys before that are talkers that don't know what they are doing, but he brings both," Head Coach Jay Gruden said. "He brings an edge to him that rubs off on people. Not to say we didn't have that before, but it is just an added dimension with him being here. He also has a great knowledge of our system already and he can communicate that well with the other safeties, young safeties, the linebackers... and the corners."

While Swearingen and Norman — former high school teammates in Greenwood, S.C. — account for most of the spotlight and the volume among the group, the Redskins have already had a number of young players make important contributions in the secondary this season. Receiver-convert Quinton Dunbar was called upon to start in place of an injured Norman and registered a couple of critical passes defended in a win over San Francisco in Week 6. Rookie safety Montae Nicholson announced his presence in a big way in Week 3, intercepting Raiders quarterback Derek Carr on the game's first possession and later leveling and knocking wide receiver Michael Crabtree out of the game with a legal hit. Even Bashaud Breehan — now one of the veterans of the group in his fourth year — has rebounded from a difficult 2016 campaign to earn plaudits for his play early in 2017.

Collectively, the unit has helped put the Redskins on pace to finish in the Top 10 in opponent passer rating for the first time in a decade.

WEEK 3: RAIDER ROUT

Prior to their meeting with the Redskins on Sunday Night Football in Week 3, the Oakland Raiders had been one of the toasts of the NFL through two weeks. They entered the contest ranked first in the NFL in points per game, second in yards per play, third in third down percentage and fourth in yards per game. They entered the day as one of eight undefeated teams in the NFL.

The Redskins categorically and systematically dismantled the Raiders, earning a 27-10 victory in front of the nation's eyes. The Redskins outgained the Raiders, 472-128. Washington's 344-yard differential was its largest in regular season play since a 385-yard advantage against the Chicago Bears on Dec. 15, 1974, a span of 660 regular season games.

Included below are the Redskins' largest single-game yardage differentials in records available dating back to 1950:

LARGEST YARDAGE DIFFERENTIALS (REDSKINS IN REGULAR SEASON SINCE 1950):

| Game Date | Opp. | Yds. For | Yds. All. | +/- |
|---------------------|------------|------------|------------|-------------|
| 1. 12/15/1974 | Chi | 511 | 126 | +385 |

| 4. 11/4/1990 | Det | 676 | 351 | +325 |
| 5t. Two games tied | | | | +301 |

The Redskins held the Raiders to 128 total yards. It was Washington's fifth game allowing 130 or fewer net yards since the 1970 merger and its first since 1992.

130 OR FEWER NET YARDS ALLOWED (REDSKINS IN REGULAR SEASON SINCE 1970):

The Redskins tied a team record by limiting the Raiders to 0-of-11 on third downs. It marked the third time since 1991 that the Redskins have held an opponent without a third down conversion.

NO THIRD DOWN CONVERSIONS ALLOWED (REDSKINS, RECORDS DATING BACK TO 1991):

The Redskins threw for 356 net passing yards in the contest, 150 of which were registered by running back Chris Thompson. Thompson, whom Head Coach Jay Gruden calls the best third-down back in the NFL (see Page 26), surpassed the 140 receiving yards accrued by running back Dick James in a 1962 contest against the Pittsburgh Steelers.

WEEK 2: GROUND AND POUND

Following a season debut in which the Philadelphia Eagles limited the Redskins to 64 rushing yards on 17 carries, the Redskins' offense entered Week 2 with something prove about its running game.

One win and 229 rushing yards later, consider the Redskins' performance against the Los Angeles Rams a subtle statement. The team recorded its first 200-yard rushing effort since Week 16 of the 2016 season at Chicago, and the 229 yards were the second-most by the Redskins under Head Coach Jay Gruden, trailing only Week 6 of the 2016 season vs. Philadelphia (230).

The game was the Redskins' 21st 200-yard rushing game since 2000:

According to the Elias Sports Bureau, with the efforts by running backs Rob Kelley (78 yards), Chris Thompson (77) and Samaje Perine (67) against the Rams, the Redskins had three different players reach 65 rushing yards in a single game for the first time since Dec. 1, 1957, against the Chicago Bears (Ed Sutton, 72; Jim Podoley, 71; Don Bosseler, 68).

KIRK COUSINS

Kirk Cousins repeatedly said he knew he had to prove himself in 2016. But for Cousins, having to prove himself was nothing new.

Cousins entered 2016 following a record-setting 2015 campaign. In his first full season as a starter, he set single-season team marks for attempts (543), completions (379), passing yards (4,166) and 300-yard passing games (seven) in leading the Redskins to an NFC East title. Cousins threw a touchdown pass in all 16 regular season games in 2015, becoming the first player in team history to throw a touchdown in all 16 games in a season since the adoption of the 16-game schedule in 1978.

The year was temporary vindication for Cousins, who did not even earn the starting role until Head Coach Jay Gruden said "It's Kirk's team" on Aug. 31 that year.

"He's always in the meetings, he's on time, he's wanting to do extra work, he's studying the film, he's a gym rat, he's a film rat. That's just what you need to be a successful quarterback in this league," Gruden said in training camp in 2016. "The great quarterbacks are that way in their first year and in their 15th year, that's the way you have to be at the position, and he's got the mental makeup to be a great one."

The 2015 season was another opportunity for Cousins to prove himself in a football career defined by those moments. As a prep quarterback at Holland (Mich.) Christian H.S., he was lightly recruited, fielding a small handful of late scholarship offers, primarily from MAC programs. When Michigan State showed late interest, Cousins mentions that he took his official visit to East Lansing hoping to recruit the coaching staff rather than have the coaching staff recruit him.

That lightly regarded recruit would go on to earn Michigan State's starting role as a sophomore, beating out future NFL quarterback Nick Foles in the process. He became only the second player in Spartan history to be named team captain as a sophomore en route to becoming a three-year captain for the program. He set records in virtually every passing category in school history while appearing in 45 games, starting 39 of his last 40 contests.

Cousins once again had to prove himself upon transitioning to the NFL level. He was the second quarterback selected by the Redskins in the 2012 NFL Draft and entered the league having to compete with veteran Rex Grossman for backup duties. Cousins proved himself capable as a rookie that season in a couple of crucial situations, including leading a game-tying drive in an eventual overtime win against the eventual Super Bowl champion Baltimore Ravens in Week 14 and winning his first career start in Cleveland a week later to keep the team alive for its eventual NFC East title that season.

In six seasons with the Redskins, Cousins has appeared in 52 games with 47 starts, completing 1,160-of-1,754 passes for 13,750 yards with 84 passing touchdowns. He ranks in the Top 10 in team history in completions, passing touchdowns and passing yardage. Cousins has also accrued 22 career 300-yard games (including 21 in the regular season), the most in franchise history.

So while some observers wait for Cousins to prove himself again, the quarterback has already garnered respect around the NFL.

"I don't know what people are looking for. He threw for over 4,000 yards and over 25 touchdowns [in 2015]. The last six games of the season his quarterback rating was over 100," Pittsburgh Steelers Head Coach Mike Tomlin said prior to Week 1 in 2016. "He needs no endorsement from me."

The widespread discussions about his contract status haven't fazed Cousins, who has viewed his entire football career as a series of one-day opportunities.

"In this league it's one year at a time - whether you're on a long-term deal, one-year deal or two-year deal. I mean, I had a four-year deal as a rookie but it didn't feel like a four-year deal, it felt like a one-day deal every single day I was here," Cousins said. "So I don't think things have changed a whole lot in that regard. I have got to go out there and prove myself each and every game of every season. When you do that, I think the rest will take care of itself."

JORDAN REED

In recent seasons, Redskins players have often extolled the ability of tight end Jordan Reed to anyone who will listen.

“As I’ve said before and said every week, I don’t know anybody who can guard that young man. When he’s on, he’s on, and it’s tough to stop. He’s the best receiving tight end in the NFL, hands down.”

- Five-time Pro Bowl tackle Trent Williams on Jordan Reed in 2015, as told to Master Tesfatsion of The Washington Post

After a career year in 2015 and another strong campaign in 2016, the entire NFL has now taken notice.

Reed earned his first career Pro Bowl selection in 2016, the first by a Redskins tight end since Chris Cooley in 2008. Reed joined Cooley [2007-08], Stephen Alexander [2000], Jean Fugett [1977] and Jerry Smith [1967 and 1969] as the only Redskins tight ends to earn Pro Bowl honors since the game’s inception in 1950.

Despite being limited by injury to only 12 games with eight starts in 2016, the ex-college-quarterback recorded 66 receptions for 686 yards with six receiving touchdowns. A year earlier, he compiled arguably the greatest season by a tight end in franchise history. During the 2015 regular season, Reed recorded 87 receptions for 952 yards (both team records for a tight end) with 11 receiving touchdowns, becoming the first tight end to lead the Redskins in all three categories since Fugett in 1977.

“He was a puppy when he came in here physically; now he’s filling out and he’s a bigger guy. He’s playing with a ton of confidence,” Head Coach Jay Gruden said in 2016. “We can move him around and do a lot of different things with him. He’s a smart player. He can see coverages, he can work off leverage of the defenders, he’s got big strong hands and he’s excellent after the catch. Really, the sky is the limit for Jordan. I have all of the confidence in the world that when the ball is thrown to him, he’s going to be in the right spot and make the catch. And he can beat a lot of people. He’s getting better and better, more and more confident and he’s blocking better, too. He’s a heck of a player, no doubt.”

In 51 career games with 26 starts for Washington, Reed has compiled 274 career receptions for 2,808 yards with 22 receiving touchdowns. In Week 4 of the 2016 season against Cleveland, Reed recorded his 200th career reception in his 38th career game, becoming the fastest tight end to reach 200 career receptions in NFL history, surpassing Pro Football Hall of Famer Kellen Winslow.

JAMISON CROWDER

Thirty-four wide receivers were drafted in the 2015 NFL Draft. Entering the 2017 season, 30 of them had appeared in NFL game action. Thirteen of those players were drafted ahead of the moment when the Washington Redskins selected Jamison Crowder with the No. 105 overall selection in the fourth round.

However, only two of Crowder's classmates (Oakland's Amari Cooper and Minnesota's Stefon Diggs) have recorded more career receptions than the Duke product, who has placed himself on the NFL radar with 145 receptions for 1,600 yards and nine receiving touchdowns in his young career.

Crowder entered his rookie season in 2015 with expectations of assuming the team's role at punt returner, but Crowder rapidly exceeded those limits and earned the team's top slot receiver role and became another weapon for the Redskins on third down.

"We had a penciled-in punt returner job for him, but for him to win the starting inside slot receiver is a testament to him and how quickly he picked it up and his production," Head Coach Jay Gruden said. "When you draft guys, you have high hopes for them, but you never expect them to be this much of a factor this early, especially fourth-fifth rounders."

"He's one of those kids: You can put him in a phone booth and you probably wouldn't get a hand on him."

- Receivers Coach Ike Hilliard to The Washington Post's Liz Clarke

In Week 5 of his sophomore campaign in 2016, Crowder ended the Redskins' 124-game punt return touchdown drought with an 85-yard touchdown at Baltimore. His punt return for touchdown was the Redskins' first since Oct. 26, 2008, when Santana Moss returned a punt 80 yards for a touchdown at Detroit.

At 23 years and 114 days old, Crowder became the youngest member of the Redskins to return a punt for a touchdown since Brian Mitchell (23 years, 35 days) at Cincinnati on Sept. 22, 1991, according to records provided by Pro Football Reference.

Crowder finished the 2016 season with a 12.1-yard punt return average, the best by a member of the Redskins since 2001. His fourth-place ranking in the NFL in punt return average was the best by a member of the Redskins since Brian Mitchell's second-place finish in 1995. The dual threat was the only player in the NFL in 2016 to catch at least 65 passes and average at least 11.0 yards per return.

On offense, Crowder's 126 receptions from 2015-16 were the second-most by a member of the Redskins in the first two years of an NFL career.

RECEPTIONS, FIRST TWO NFL SEASONS (REDSKINS HISTORY):

| Player | Years | Rec | Yds | TD |
| 1. Gary Clark | 1985-86 | 146 | 2,191 | 12 |

TRENDING

CHRIS THOMPSON

Late in the 2017 preseason, Head Coach Jay Gruden was asked about running back Chris Thompson's value to the Washington offense.

"He's a very valuable commodity to our football team, both in pass protection and getting out on the routes," Gruden said. "I mean, the thought of him not being around scares the heck out of me."

Worry no more, Coach. The Redskins signed Thompson to a multi-year contract extension in Week 1 of the 2017 season, locking up the third-down back that Gruden considers the best in the NFL.

"When you're talking about third downs, that's the most important down in football. There's nobody better as a third-down back in my opinion than Chris."

- Head Coach Jay Gruden on RB Chris Thompson

Dubbed the "Chris Army Knife" by some fans for his ability to run, catch and block, Thompson's story has been one of perseverance. At Florida State, two broken vertebrae ended his 2011 season and a knee injury ended his 2012 campaign. Shoulder surgery cut his 2013 rookie season in Washington short, and he spent the majority of the 2014 season on the team's practice squad.

But Thompson's role began to blossom in recent years. Early in 2017, Thompson has picked up where he left off in 2016. He scored the Redskins' first offensive points of the season in Week 1, pinballing off Philadelphia defenders for a 29-yard receiving touchdown. He followed that performance up with a career day in Los Angeles, rushing three times and posting career highs in rushing yards (77) and rushing touchdowns (two, including a 61-yarder) against the Rams. His 25.7-yard rushing average in the contest was the best by a member of the Redskins with at least three carries in a game in records available dating back to 1960.

One week later, Thompson was the focal point of the Redskins' aerial assault in a 27-10 drubbing of the Oakland Raiders, gaining 150 yards on six receptions and contributing another 38 yards on eight rushing attempts. His 188 yards from scrimmage were the most by any member of the Redskins since Alfred Morris on Dec. 30, 2012 vs. Dallas (212, including 200 rushing and 12 receiving).

Thompson would add another 100-yard receiving game against the San Francisco 49ers in Week 6, becoming only the second Redskins running back since 1960 to record multiple 100-yard games through the air in a single season (Dick James, 1962).

"It's great that you see the hard work pay off for somebody like Chris," Gruden said. "He's such a great kid off the field. You want to see him succeed in the worst way because he does everything exactly right the way you ask him. In practice, he takes all the reps, he works hard, never takes a play off. He's never been late one time to a meeting or a workout. He's a coach's dream, quite frankly."

Though the team often rations his touches, Thompson has become one of the most efficient running backs in the NFL with the ball in his hands. Thompson's 6.8 yards per touch rank second among active NFL running backs with at least 200 career offensive touches.

CAREER YARDS PER OFFENSIVE TOUCH (ACTIVE NFL RUNNING BACKS, MIN. 200 TOUCHES):

VERNON DAVIS

Washington, D.C. native Vernon Davis came home in free agency in 2016, and while the Redskins may not have known exactly what they were getting from the veteran addition, Davis delivered with 44 receptions for 583 yards with two touchdowns.

"I have been actually surprised at the impact he's had on this football team both on and off the field," Gruden said. "He's a great guy, he works hard, he's good in the running game, he pays attention in meetings. He's obviously got the speed and skillset that you need at the tight end position. So I think he's been just awesome as far as his contributions."

Davis now ranks in or near the Top 10 in NFL history in career receptions, receiving yards and receiving touchdowns by a tight end.

RYAN KERRIGAN

With a wrestling-inspired sack celebration, linebacker Ryan Kerrigan has earned the moniker "The Showstopper" since joining the Redskins in 2011. But while it might not have the same cachet, calling the two-time Pro Bowler "Mr. Reliable" might be just as apt.

If patience is a virtue, the Redskins were virtuous in the first round of the 2011 NFL Draft, as the team opted to trade back from its No. 10 overall selection to the 16th overall pick. With the selection, the Redskins selected Kerrigan, the then-defensive end out of Purdue.

Kerrigan has started all 102 regular season games played by the Redskins since he entered the league in 2011, the longest active streak of consecutive starts by any NFL linebacker. In 2016, Kerrigan became the first member of the Redskins to start all 16 games in each of the first six seasons of an NFL career since the adoption of the 16-game schedule in 1978. In Week 4 of the 2017 season, Kerrigan became the first member of the Redskins since at least 1970 to open a career with 100 consecutive regular season starts.

The Muncie, Ind. native became only the fifth player in NFL history to open a career with at least 7.5 sacks in each of his first six seasons, joining Jared Allen, Derrick Thomas, DeMarcus Ware and Reggie White. He also became only the fifth member of the Redskins to post multiple 10-sack seasons since 1982 (Dexter Manley, 4; Charles Mann, 4; Andre Carter, 2; Brian Orakpo, 2). He's also displayed aptitude with the ball in hands, as he has returned all three of his career interceptions for touchdowns, joining Julius Peppers and Pro Football Hall of Famer Jason Taylor as the only players in league history with 60+ sacks and three or more interception return touchdowns.

Kerrigan's productivity has provided a number of opportunities for him to showcase his co-opted celebration.

"Will Compton has been kind of getting in my ear for a while to do the Shawn Michaels from wrestling — the HBK," Kerrigan said in 2014 of the inspiration for his celebrations. "All he kept saying was, 'Hit the HBK, hit the HBK.' Finally, I did right by him and hit the HBK a couple times. On the second and third ones, when I didn't do it, he was giving me a bunch of hell on the sidelines, like, 'Why didn't you do it? You need to trademark it.' I'm like, 'Well, I can't trademark it, it's HBK.' But that's where it came from."

The gesture resonated with wrestling fans and Redskins fans alike. The celebration was promoted by WWE on Twitter, and Redskins fans immediately began referring to the celebration as the "Heartbreak Kerrigan," or #HBKerrigan in hashtag form.

The Purdue product ended his college career tied for the Football Bowl Subdivision record with 14 career forced fumbles, and his innate knack for knocking the ball loose has translated to the NFL. Kerrigan has been credited with 20 forced fumbles in his career, the most by a member of the Redskins since 1994 and among the most by any NFL player since 2011.

Kerrigan's impact on the Redskins has transcended football, as he was honored with the team's Walter Payton Man of the Year award in 2015. In addition to participating in numerous events through the Washington Redskins Charitable Foundation, Kerrigan welcomed 185 guests to the Grand Hyatt Washington in 2015 for his third Celebrity Waiter Night, raising more than $100,000 for his Blitz for the Better Foundation, which provides support to seriously ill, special needs and physically challenged children throughout the Greater Washington D.C. area.

In training camp in 2016, the question was posed to Head Coach Jay Gruden: Is there a better example for young players than Kerrigan?

"Not really, no," Gruden said. "He's very humble, number one. Keeps to himself and does exactly what's asked of him in practice. He practices hard; in fact, we have to pull him back a little bit because he practices so hard and we want to keep him healthy for the 16-week grind. He's a top-notch guy, on and off the field, character-wise. He's what you're looking for."

CORNERBACK CORNER

JOSH NORMAN

When the Carolina Panthers rescinded cornerback Josh Norman's franchise tag and allowed the All-Pro defender to enter unrestricted free agency on April 20, roles instantly became reversed. The then-28-year-old lockdown corner became the subject of teams trying to lock down his services.

The Redskins mobilized quickly, dispatching members of the Redskins' coaching staff on April 22 to pick up Norman and his family from his Carolina home and bring them to team headquarters. The group arrived back in Ashburn early that afternoon, and after the full press and a family vote, Norman was a member of the Washington Redskins by 9:30 p.m.

"It was an exciting 24 hours there and we're happy as heck to get him," Head Coach Jay Gruden said. "I think he's one of the premier corners in the National Football League. He can matchup with receivers, he can play inside/outside, he's got great ball skills, he's a ball hawk. You can't coach that – you really can't."

Norman joined the Redskins having previously appeared in 53 regular season games with 38 starts for Carolina, recording 178 tackles (136 solo), 36 passes defended, seven interceptions (two returned for touchdowns), four forced fumbles and three fumbles recovered from 2012-15.

In 2015, Norman started all 16 regular season games and all three postseason games for the Panthers, recording career highs in interceptions (four), forced fumbles (three) and fumbles recovered (two) in addition to tying for the league lead in interceptions returned for touchdowns (two). His highly decorated 2015 campaign resulted in a myriad of honors, including All-Pro selections from both the Associated Press and Pro Football Writers Association in addition to sharing PFWA Co-Most Improved Player of the Year honors with new teammate Kirk Cousins.

Since that breakout campaign in 2015, few defensive backs have been as disruptive as the man known colloquially as "J-No."

| 4. Josh Norman | 41 |
| 5. Robert Alford | 40 |

Norman's accolades and productivity speak for themselves, but what kind of person were the Redskins getting? Gruden and the Redskins learned early in 2016.

"I've been very impressed with Josh from the day that he got here," Gruden said. "He works extremely hard. He's got a great energy every single time that he walks out onto the field, and he's the last one off the field. He's attentive at meetings – he's excellent. As far as his off-the-field 'antics' or on-the-field penalties that he's gotten, he's a physical football player. He's in your face and he's very competitive. You don't want to change that about him at all; that's what makes him, him. Obviously we might have to work on his hand placement in bump-and-run so he doesn't hit the receiver in the head, but his aggression, his competitive style, that's what drew us to him in the first place. We would never change that."

BASHAUD BREELAND

The Redskins believed they found a gem in the fourth round of the 2014 NFL Draft when they selected cornerback Bashaud Breeland out of Clemson. He rewarded their faith as a rookie in 2014, leading the team with two interceptions and starting 15 games – the third-most by a Redskins rookie cornerback in team history behind only Champ Bailey (16 in 1999) and Pro Football Hall of Famer Darrell Green (16 in 1983).

In 2015, the signing of Chris Culliver and the return of DeAngelo Hall from injury was supposed to allow Breeland to flourish in nickel role, but various injuries to the Redskins' secondary once again thrust him into a starting role. Breeland compiled 81 tackles (59 solo), a team- and career-high 16 passes defended, two interceptions, three forced fumbles and two fumble recoveries in 15 games, including a Week 9 contest in which he was limited by injury.

In Week 5 of the 2015 season, Breeland posted four passes defended and his first interception of the season, playing a key role in helping limit Falcons receiver Julio Jones to only five receptions and no receiving touchdowns. A week later, Breeland turned in a career day, recording an interception, forced fumble and a career-high two fumble recoveries to become only the fifth NFL player since the turn of the century to record two fumble recoveries and an interception in a single game.

*Accomplished feat in first half

With picks in Weeks 5-6 that season, Breeland became the first member of the Redskins to record an interception in consecutive games since London Fletcher did so in three straight games across Weeks 14-16 of the 2012 season.

However, Breeland's biggest play of the 2015 season may not have even ended with the ball in his hands. In Week 7 against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, the Redskins had fought back from a 24-0 deficit to pull within three points. On a first down with slightly more than four minutes remaining, Tampa Bay running back Doug Martin broke free down the right sideline with a clear path to a game-clinching touchdown. Breeland – coming from the opposite side of the field – was able to push Martin out-of-bounds after 49 yards at the Washington 5-yard line for a touchdown-saving stop.

Breeland injured his hamstring with the monstrous effort, but the Redskins' defense responded by holding the Buccaneers to a field goal on the drive, allowing the Washington offense to drive down the field and score a touchdown to complete the largest comeback in franchise history.

After the game, Head Coach Jay Gruden noted the importance of Breeland's stop in the midst of the second-year cornerback's career-high 13-tackle day.

"At the end of the day, they score there, the game's over. That shows what kind of guy he is," Gruden said. "I talk about Breeland being an ultimate competitor. If he takes that one play off, or one instance and they go up by 10, the game's over, most likely. And he hustled, got them down at the five. We got a big stop, held a field goal, we go down and score."

EAGLES 30, REDSKINS 17

LANDOVER, Md. – The Washington Redskins lost to the Philadelphia Eagles, 30-17, in front of an announced crowd of 78,685 people at FedExField in Week 1.

After ceding a 13-0 early lead to the Eagles, the Redskins responded with two touchdowns in the second quarter to temporarily take a 14-13 advantage. Linebacker Ryan Kerrigan intercepted Eagles quarterback Carson Wentz and returned the interception 24 yards for a touchdown. The interception was the third of Kerrigan's career, with all three having been returned for touchdowns.

With that touchdown and his pick-six in the 2011 season opener, Kerrigan became the sixth player in league history to record multiple Week 1 interception returns for touchdowns in a career, according to records provided by STATS. Kerrigan joined Lem Barney, Tyrone Braxton, Terrell Buckley, Chuck Howley and Aqib Talib, who all have two career Week 1 pick-sixes to their credit. Kerrigan tied DeAngelo Hall, Monte Coleman, Andre Collins, Brig Owens and Mike Bass for second-most career interception return touchdowns in Redskins history.

The second touchdown came via a 29-yard catch and run by running back Chris Thompson from quarterback Kirk Cousins. The touchdown was the 73rd touchdown pass of Cousins' career and the sixth receiving touchdown of Thompson's career.

The Redskins had the ball trailing 22-17 in the final minutes until Eagles defensive tackle Fletcher Cox recovered a Cousins fumble and returned it 20 yards for a touchdown. After video review to determine whether or not Cousins' arm was moving forward, the call stood, pushing the final score to 30-17.

With the performance, Cousins moved past Billy Kilmer (12,352) for the fifth-most career passing yards in Redskins history.

GAME 2

Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum

REDSKINS 27, RAMS 20

LOS ANGELES – The Washington Redskins defeated the Los Angeles Rams, 27-20, in front of an announced crowd of 56,612 people at Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum in Week 2.

The Redskins played in the greater Los Angeles area for the first time since Dec. 24, 1994, a 24-21 Redskins victory that represented the Rams' final contest in Los Angeles prior to the franchise's relocation to St. Louis. The Redskins improved to 26-13-1 against the Rams all-time, including postseason play, with the victory.

The Redskins raced out to a 13-0 lead, buoyed largely by the strength of the running game. The Redskins recorded 167 rushing yards in the first half, the team's most in a first half since Dec. 12, 2010, vs. Tampa Bay (174). Of those 167 first-half rushing yards, 75 came in the first quarter, the team's most in an opening frame since Week 2 of the 2015 season, coincidentally Washington's most recent contest against the Rams.

The Redskins finished the game with 229 rushing yards, the team's first 200-yard rushing effort since Week 16 of the 2016 season at Chicago. According to the Elias Sports Bureau, with running backs Rob Kelley (78 yards), Chris Thompson (77) and Samaje Perine (67), the Redskins had three different players reach 65 rushing yards in a single game for the first time since Dec. 1, 1957, against the Chicago Bears (Ed Sutton, 72; Jim Podoley, 71; Don Bosseler, 68).

Running back Chris Thompson rushed three times and posted career highs in rushing yards (77) and rushing touchdowns (two), including a career-long 61-yard touchdown scamper. It marked his second career multi-touchdown game, joining Week 16 of the 2016 season at Chicago (one rushing, one receiving). Thompson's 25.7-yard rushing average was the best by a member of the Redskins with at least three carries in a game in records available dating back to 1960.

Tied at 20 in the final minutes, quarterback Kirk Cousins engineered a 10-play, 70-yard drive that culminated in an 11-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Ryan Grant with 1:49 remaining. On the ensuing Rams possession, linebacker Mason Foster intercepted Rams quarterback Jared Goff to seal the victory for Washington.

FedExField (Landover, Md.)

REDSKINS 27, RAIDERS 10

LANDOVER, Md. – The Washington Redskins defeated the Oakland Raiders, 27-10, in front of an announced crowd of 77,123 people at FedExField in Week 3.

The Redskins outgained the Raiders, 472-128. Washington's 344-yard differential was its largest in regular season play since a 385-yard advantage against the Chicago Bears on Dec. 15, 1974, a span of 660 regular season games. The Redskins held the Raiders to 128 total yards, the lowest total during Head Coach Jay Gruden's tenure in Washington. The total represented the fewest yards allowed by the Redskins since Oct. 12, 1992, against Denver.

The Redskins tied a team record by limiting the Raiders to 0-of-11 on third downs. It marked the first time the Redskins have held an opponent without a third down conversion since Dec. 30, 2007, against Dallas.

Quarterback Kirk Cousins recorded season highs in completions (25), passing yards (365), passing touchdowns (three) and passer rating (150.7). He added to his team record for career 300-yard passing games (20, including 19 in regular season play), and he exceeded a 150.0 passer rating as the starter for the fourth time in his career and his first time since Week 17 of the 2015 season at Dallas.

Running back Chris Thompson finished the contest with a career-high 150 receiving yards, surpassing his previous high of 57 yards, set in Week 3 of the 2015 season against the New York Giants. Thompson produced the most receiving yards in a game by any Redskins running back in records available dating back to 1960, surpassing the 140 receiving yards by running back Dick James on Dec. 16, 1962. Including his 38 rushing yards, Thompson finished the game with 188 yards from scrimmage, the most by any member of the Redskins since Alfred Morris on Dec. 30, 2012 vs. Dallas (212, including 200 rushing and 12 receiving).

Wide receiver Josh Doctson recorded his first career touchdown reception on his first reception of the season, a 52-yard pass from Cousins. Doctson became the first member of the Redskins to score his first career touchdown on a reception of 50 yards or longer since Rashad Ross in the final week of the 2015 season (71 yards at Dallas).

The game was the Redskins' first appearance on NBC's Sunday Night Football in 2017. The Redskins improved to 18-17-1 all-time on Sunday Night Football since the broadcast package's debut in 1987 and won consecutive appearances on Sunday Night Football for the first time since Weeks 15-16 of the 2007 season.

Arrowhead Stadium [Kansas City, Mo.]

CHIEFS 29, REDSKINS 20

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – The Washington Redskins fell to the Kansas City Chiefs, 29-20, in front of an announced crowd of 74,587 people at Arrowhead Stadium in Week 4.

The Redskins scored on the game's opening possession, with quarterback Kirk Cousins hitting wide receiver Terrelle Pryor Sr. for a 44-yard touchdown. The receiving touchdown was the fifth of Pryor's career and his first as a member of the Redskins. The receiving touchdown was the longest of Pryor's career and his longest touchdown of any kind since a 93-yard rushing touchdown on Oct. 27, 2013, as quarterback of the Oakland Raiders. It also marked back-to-back weeks with an opening-drive touchdown for the Redskins for the first time since Weeks 8-10 of the 2016 season (including a bye in Week 9).

The teams traded the lead in the third quarter, as a go-ahead touchdown run by Chiefs quarterback Alex Smith was immediately answered with a three-play, 75-yard touchdown drive by Washington. On the drive, tight end Vernon Davis caught a 69-yard reception, moving past Heath Miller (6,569) for the 10th-most career receiving yards by a tight end in NFL history on the play.

The Redskins engineered a 10-play, 53-yard drive late in the contest that resulted in a game-tying 40-yard field goal from kicker Dustin Hopkins with 47 seconds remaining. However, a 43-yard field goal and a fumble recovery touchdown on a desperation lateral play in the final few seconds accounted for the game's final score.

Linebacker Ryan Kerrigan made both his 100th career regular season appearance and his 100th career regular season start in the contest. Kerrigan became the first member of the Redskins since the 1970 merger to open a career with 100 consecutive starts, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

FedExField (Landover, Md.)

REDSKINS 26, 49ERS 24

LANDOVER, Md. – The Washington Redskins defeated the San Francisco 49ers, 26-24, in front of an announced crowd of 75,568 people at FedExField in Week 6.

The Redskins opened the game with an eight-play, 75-yard drive that resulted in an 11-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Kirk Cousins to wide receiver Josh Doctson. With the score, the Redskins recorded touchdowns on their first possession in three consecutive games for the first time since Weeks 13-15 of the 2004 season.

The Redskins pushed their first-half lead to 17-0 with after a three-yard touchdown pass to running back Samaje Perine and a 48-yard field goal by kicker Dustin Hopkins. However, San Francisco responded with 17 consecutive points across the second and third quarters, evening the game at 17-17.

The Redskins engineered drives of 72 and 84 yards in the fourth quarter, resulting in a Hopkins field goal and a Cousins touchdown run. The Niners cut the Redskins' lead to two points on a late touchdown pass, but Washington recovered the resulting onside kick. After three consecutive runs and a punt, the Redskins' defense stopped San Francisco on the 49ers' final drive, as cornerback Kendall Fuller sealed the 26-24 victory with an interception with three seconds remaining.

Cousins completed 25-of-37 passes for 330 yards with two touchdowns and one interception for a passer rating of 102.3 and also rushed four times for 26 yards, including a seven-yard touchdown run. On the touchdown run, Cousins tied Sonny Jurgensen (10) for the second-most career rushing touchdowns by a Redskins quarterback.

Running back Chris Thompson rushed a career-high 16 times for 33 yards and caught four passes for 105 yards in his first career start. The 100-yard receiving game was his second of the season, making him only the second Redskins running back with multiple 100-yard receiving games in a single season in records dating back to 1960 (Dick James, two in 1962). With the effort, Thompson became the first member of the Redskins to lead the team in rushing and receiving yardage in the same game since Evan Royster in Week 17 of the 2011 season at Philadelphia.

Lincoln Financial Field (Philadelphia)

EAGLES 34, REDSKINS 24

PHILADELPHIA – The Washington Redskins fell to the Philadelphia Eagles, 34-24, in front of an announced crowd of 69,596 people at Lincoln Financial Field in Week 7.

Washington held leads of 3-0 and 10-3 in the first half, but a string of 21 consecutive points by the Eagles on either side of halftime pushed Philadelphia to a 24-10 advantage. Washington cut the lead to 24-17 on a five-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Kirk Cousins to tight end Jordan Reed in the third quarter. However, 10 more Philadelphia points and a late touchdown connection from Cousins to Reed accounted for the final 34-24 score.

Cousins completed 30-of-40 passes for 303 yards with three touchdowns and one interception for a passer rating of 110.7. Cousins added to his team record for career 300-yard passing games (22, including 21 in regular season play). It also marked his fourth consecutive game with a passer rating of 100.0 or better for the first time since a six-game regular season streak in Weeks 12-17 of the 2015 season.

Reed posted season highs in receptions [eight] and receiving yards [64] and tied his career high with two receiving touchdowns. With the two touchdowns, Reed passed Jean Fugett (21) for third-most career receiving touchdowns by a tight end in Redskins history. He now trails only Jerry Smith (60) and Chris Cooley (33) among tight ends in team history.

The Redskins logged their 70th all-time appearance on Monday Night Football since 1970. The appearance tied the Redskins with the Denver Broncos for fourth-most by any team in the program's history.

SR. VP OF PLAYER PERSONNEL DOUG WILLIAMS

Will Doug Williams have the power to shape the Redskins?
‘I’ve never been a yes guy.’

By Liz Clarke, The Washington Post
July 11, 2017

With one misstep as he dropped back to pass, quarterback Doug Williams crumpled to the ground late in the first quarter of Super Bowl XXII, his left knee wrenched and his scoreless Washington Redskins trailing the Denver Broncos by 10 points.

“Don’t touch me!” Williams yelled in searing pain as trainers rushed out to help. “If the good Lord lets me get up, I’m going to finish this game.”

Williams did so in historic fashion. Sidelined for just two offensive snaps, he returned on a hyperextended knee to throw an 80-yard touchdown pass on his first play, spurring a 35-point second-quarter eruption that sealed the Redskins’ 42-10 upset, earned him MVP honors and cemented his legacy as the first African American quarterback to lead a team to the Super Bowl championship.

But what Williams remembers most about that day 29 years ago, as Coach Joe Gibbs exulted and teammates thrust fists in the sky, was being met in the tunnel by his college coach.

“Hell, Cat! It ain’t about the four TDs!” said Grambling State’s legendary coach, Eddie Robinson, who always had called his big-armed quarterback Cat. “It’s about the fact that you got up!”

Williams’s life — well before that moment and ever since — has been a master class in getting up and getting back to work.

Last month, at age 61 — after nearly three decades coaching high school and college football and climbing the ranks of NFL front offices in Jacksonville, Tampa Bay and Washington — Williams was named the Redskins’ senior vice president of player personnel. The job puts him on a hierarchical par with Coach Jay Gruden, reporting only to Redskins owner Daniel Snyder and team President Bruce Allen.

“Jay is entrusted with the football team, and I’m entrusted to make sure we get Jay what he needs,” Williams recently explained. “And we’ve got to get results.”

But as Williams embarks on the job, the question is: Will his bosses give him rein to do it?

There is reason to be skeptical given Snyder’s record of meddling and the abrupt way he and Allen fired their hand-picked general manager, Scot McCloughan, in March, two years into a four-year contract.

It’s easy to view Williams’s promotion as mere window dressing designed to placate alienated fans, many of whom responded to McCloughan’s ouster with a #FireBruce social media campaign. It’s also easy to view it as largely symbolic — designed to make the Redskins’ front office look more like a high-functioning organization and less like a two-man fiefdom — while conveying little autonomy.

Williams sees no gain in rebutting either assumption in detail, noting that few NFL analysts understand the power structure of NFL front offices, which varies from team to team. He prefers to steer clear of politics, he explains, and work behind the scenes and by consensus.

Williams crafted his own job description, including his title, spelling out responsibilities that give him control of the Redskins’ personnel department while leaving contracts and salary-cap management to longtime specialist Eric Schaffer, who got a bump in title, too.

“I’ve never been a yes guy,” Williams said. “Now, can I be someone who can talk things over and work it out? Yes. I know Jay well and Bruce well. And I know there are going to be times when we may not agree. That’s a good thing; that’s what scouting is all about.”

He is eager to get started, accustomed to the hard work of proving skeptics wrong, which started decades ago with the pernicious myth that black athletes couldn’t handle the complex demands of quarterback.

Challenges because of race

Still an imposing figure, Williams is a gifted storyteller with keen recall of his childhood, his life’s many blessings and every coach, relative, teammate and friend who played a role in his achievements. As for the injustices along the way, and there were many, they have left no outward trace of bitterness. In Williams’s recollection, they are simply facts of the period in which he was reared, before integration reached Louisiana’s East Baton Rouge parish and before NFL coaches and scouts saw the ability of a college quarterback before they saw the color of his skin.

Williams’s story begins on a gravel road just outside Zachary, La., where he was born in 1955. It was a small, close-knit community, with elders such as Mr. Will, Miss Mary and Miss Rebecca minding the Williams children when their parents went to work each morning. Cross burnings were weekly events on nearby Plank Road, and hooded Klansmen didn’t just lurk in the woods but handed out pamphlets at intersections in broad daylight.

“We understood the possibility that something bad could happen if you were out walking the streets when dusk came,” Williams recalled in a recent interview. “You understood segregation; you understood civil rights. That’s the way it was.”

A three-sport standout athlete at segregated Chaneyville High, where he played basketball, third base, pitcher, safety and quarterback — Williams wanted to become a coach like his eldest brother, Robert. When it was time for college, his mother made the decision for him after Robinson phoned the house one evening to offer her son a scholarship.

“I just talked to Coach Robinson,” she informed him, “and you’re going to Grambling. He said that you were going to class, you were going to graduate, and you were going to go to church!”

Looking back, Williams said, “That’s the best choice my mom ever made — besides bringing me into the world!”

Williams led Grambling to a 36-7 record and three Southwestern Athletic Conference titles in four years as a starter. His senior season, he led the NCAA in touchdown passes (38) and passing yards (3,286). By then, he had earned his degree in education and was doing student-teaching toward his master’s as he awaited the 1978 NFL draft.

Only one NFL team sent a coach to evaluate him: Tampa Bay, a floundering second-year expansion franchise that held the No. 1 overall pick after a two-win season. Its running backs coach, Gibbs, had studied Williams’s game film, but Buccaneers Coach John McKay wanted to know more. So Gibbs showed up unannounced at the Monroe, La., high school where Williams was teaching and took a seat at the back of the classroom.

“He came there just to watch me interact with the students,” Williams recalled, shaking his head at the memory. “He sat through six classes!”

Based largely on Gibbs’s scouting report, Tampa Bay drafted Grambling State’s star, who had finished fourth in the Heisman Trophy voting, in the first round — but traded back from first to 17th to do so, confident that other NFL teams would pass him over.

Williams sought out former Grambling State quarterback James Harris, who had been drafted by Buffalo eight years earlier, for advice. Harris, the first African American to start an NFL season at the position, was careful not to discuss the challenges he had faced in the league because of his race.

Harris didn’t want the rookie to feel the pressure to be perfect that he had felt as the NFL’s first black starting quarterback — so intense that it made him reluctant to throw for fear of an interception. “It affected your play,” Harris recalled in a telephone interview. “You couldn’t make a mistake because you realized you may get only one opportunity. ... He needed to come into the league with confidence.”

So Harris counseled him instead on preparation, the process and the game.

Tampa Bay made the NFL playoffs three times in Williams’s first four seasons and reached the 1979 NFC championship game. But as his five-year rookie contract was about to expire, he learned that he wasn’t simply the NFL’s lowest-paid starter but that his $120,000 annual salary ranked 54th among quarterbacks.

“My backup on my team made more money than me!” Williams said.

For his next contract, Williams’s agent sought a multiyear deal worth $600,000 per year. The Buccaneers countered with a one-year, $375,000 offer, explaining that season-ticket sales were down and that he could earn more if he met additional performance targets. In the midst of the negotiations, Williams's wife, Janice, died of a brain aneurysm at age 26. Their daughter, Ashley, was five months old.

Overnight, football no longer mattered. Contract guarantees, fame — none of it mattered.

A brutal cut

Williams walked away from the NFL and returned to Louisiana, where his mother, who had reared eight children of her own, and his sisters helped him raise Ashley while he took a job teaching and coaching at Northwest Middle School.

"I had my degree, and I always wanted to be a coach like my oldest brother," Williams said. "I had a baby girl whose mom had passed away, so it didn't matter whether I played football or not. It didn't matter who you were. It didn't matter how much money you made when you couldn't help somebody you would have loved to have helped. Things like that don't discriminate. It puts life in perspective."

Williams taught eighth-grade girls' gym classes and introduced football to boys who had never played.

"He taught the kids the basic fundamentals," said Robert Williams, his eldest brother and then principal of the middle school. "He never rode them. He was always positive; never derogatory. He demonstrated how to do it, and the kids respected him."

The Oklahoma Outlaws of the upstart USFL lured Williams back to the game in 1984. When the league folded two years later, Williams's phone rang.

"Doug-lassss!"

It was Gibbs, the only person other than his mother and brother Robert who called him by his formal name. Gibbs wanted to know whether Williams would consider a job as the Redskins' backup quarterback.

"Coach, I can be any '-up' you want me to!" Williams cracked. "I don't have a job!"

A year later, when Williams was 32, he led the Redskins to their second Super Bowl title under Gibbs. That spring he underwent knee surgery, and he lost his starting job to Mark Rypien after 11 games during the 1988 season. After offseason back surgery, he started only four games in 1989. Then came another call from Gibbs, who wanted to see him in his office.

Williams only could stare, finding no words, when the coach told him he was cutting him with one year remaining on his contract. He planned to start Rypien.

"I don't want to have you on the sideline, as much as people love you around here," Gibbs explained, as Williams recounted the conversation. "The last thing I need is for Ryp to have a bad day and the fans start saying, 'We want Doug!'"

As Williams rose to leave, Gibbs asked whether they were still friends.

"Not right now, Coach."

Succeeding his mentor

Williams went back to Zachary and took a job as football coach at his former high school. It wasn't called Chaneyville anymore. After integration, it was renamed Northeast, expunging the most direct link to its history as an all-black high school. But the football stadium was called Doug Williams Field. And Williams, its Super Bowl MVP alumnus, proceeded to lead Northeast to its first undefeated regular season and the state semifinals, finishing with a 13-1 mark. It included a quarterfinal victory over Isidore Newman, the elite private school in New Orleans whose quarterback was Archie Manning's boy, Peyton.

"That time at Northeast brought a lot of people together in our area — people that didn't even like each other!" Williams said. "But on Friday night, you'd look up in the stands, and they were hugging each other."

After spending 1994 tutoring running backs at Navy and the next two years as an NFL scout for Jacksonville, Williams got his first college coaching job at Morehouse College in Atlanta.

Robinson's retirement after 55 years at Grambling State brought Williams back to Louisiana to take a job that friends and relatives advised against — succeeding Robinson, the mentor he regarded as "the cornerstone of a building."

In taking over for Robinson in 1998, Williams said from the outset that no man could fill the shoes of a coach who won 408 games.

But after back-to-back 3-8 seasons, he felt he could help. And he started with the values Robinson had drilled into generations of players.

"Coach Rob was about being a good citizen," Williams said. "He was about being a good man, being able to provide for your family and being good Americans."

Equally powerful was what Coach Rob didn't say.

"Me being here today," Williams said during a recent interview at Redskins Park, "Coach Rob has a lot to do with it. Just imagine — a little old black school in Louisiana, an all-black team, and Coach Rob never, ever uttered one word about what you can't do because you're black."

Williams led Grambling to three Southwestern Athletic Conference titles from 2000 to 2002 before returning to Tampa Bay as a personnel executive. He returned as Grambling's coach in 2011, but after the team won that season's SWAC title, a 1-12 stretch followed, and Williams was fired.

Williams's estrangement with Gibbs lasted just two years. It was buried the moment they were reunited during the 1991 Senior Bowl in Alabama.

Today, there is no one Williams admires more than Gibbs and Coach Rob.

"I hold them close to my heart," he said, patting his heart twice. "Right here."

Gibbs, reached at his NASCAR team headquarters in Huntersville, N.C., hardly knew where to begin on the topic of Williams. "Really, somebody could do a movie on his life!" Gibbs said.

That day nearly 40 years ago, watching from the back of a classroom as a young student-teacher patiently instructed his pupils, is as vivid as yesterday. So, too, is the excitement he felt in rushing back to Tampa to write his report for Coach McKay.

Gibbs remembers every detail of Williams's first-quarter injury in Super Bowl XXII, his return for what he calls the "magical" second quarter and the command he had over his teammates, especially running back Timmy Smith.

"I could not get through to Timmy Smith, but boy, that Doug Williams could!" Gibbs said. "He told [Smith], 'We're not messing this up! This is our chance!' And that Timmy played his guts out." Smith rushed for 204 yards and two touchdowns. "I think a lot of it was because of Doug," Gibbs said.

Positioned to have an impact

So it was a powerful sort of homecoming last month when Williams was named to the highest-ranking job attained by an African American in the history of the Redskins, the last NFL team to integrate.

Jeff Bostic, the Hogs' former center, was among hundreds of friends, teammates and admirers who sent congratulatory messages. A longtime believer that the Redskins need more football experience in the front office, Bostic loves the move.

"Obviously, Doug knows football," Bostic said. "He's now in a position where he can make a huge impact on this football team."

If so, Williams will be the first given latitude to do so under Snyder and Allen, who have a history of overruling, undermining and undercutting their own coaches and personnel executives.

Washington-based lawyer Cyrus Mehri, legal counsel of the Fritz Pollard Alliance, a watchdog group that works with the NFL on minority hiring, pushed back on speculation that Williams was promoted for largely symbolic reasons. Mehri pointed to the fact that the Redskins adopted Williams's plan for restructuring the team's front office and characterized him as "one of the most observant, insightful people you'll ever be around."

"Anyone with one iota of thought that this is window dressing needs to put that out of their mind because that would be, number one, inaccurate, and two, unfair to Doug Williams," said Mehri, who has challenged the Redskins on their team name and in January questioned their process for filling their offensive and defensive coordinator vacancies.

Williams has experience dealing with domineering NFL owners.

He understands that no football player arrives ready-made — whether an eighth-grader who has never been in a stance or a first-round NFL draft pick. Teams need to invest in players' development, the way Gibbs did in his.

Williams also understands that to build a Super Bowl contender,

NFL teams must cut players without regard to sentiment. And ultimately, Williams knows that teamwork is more important to success than any one star.

It is insight that has served Williams well through a lifetime in football. But it remains to be seen whether the voice that commanded the Redskins huddle three decades ago can command a culture change in the Redskins' front office today.

HEAD COACH JAY GRUDEN

Why is Jay Gruden smiling? Because he's at ease in his role

By Jerry Brewer, The Washington Post
July 26, 2017

RICHMOND — It was Jay Gruden at his disarming best. A few minutes into the first media session of a supposedly tense and precarious season, the Washington Redskins coach/spokesman/comedian made light of the situation. The inevitable question about Kirk Cousins came, and Gruden used it to tease his boss, team President Bruce Allen.

"Kirk or Kurt?" Gruden asked. "With a K? Okay, gotcha."

He was referencing Allen's bizarre habit of calling the quarterback the wrong name. The audience laughed, and so did Gruden, and for one jovial moment, Cousins's uncertain future — the franchise's most perplexing problem — didn't seem so controversial and burdensome. And while one joke doesn't serve as an elixir, it provides an opportunity to transition from unrestrained offseason speculation. The focus is now on the preseason reality that a long year is just beginning and answers to weighty issues don't have to be given this very minute. And, oh yeah, sports are fun. Gruden may not be able to laugh about Allen and Cousins after the season ends, but he's not going to chew on his nails every day between now and January. Even when there's ample reason to be tight, Gruden seems like the loosest person in the room.

As he begins his fourth season in Washington, Gruden continues to evolve into a rare species of coach: one who appears comfortable managing this franchise. On the field, he hasn't won big yet, but he has led the franchise to back-to-back winning seasons for the first time in nearly two decades. He is working with his third defensive coordinator this season, but his offensive system has been highly productive, including the formation of an elite passing game. Off the field, he has done perhaps his best work by managing up, fostering solid working relationships in the organization and earning the trust of Allen and Daniel Snyder. That's why, when Washington gave Gruden a two-year extension March 4 (on his 50th birthday), he became the first coach in Snyder's 18 years owning the team to earn a second contract.

Cynics look at his 21-26-1 record and deem Gruden undeserving of any fascination. He has guided Washington to one playoff appearance in three years and zero postseason victories. But he inherited a 3-13 mess, and he has steadily made the team respectable. For certain, he must get his players to perform with better consistency, and he probably can't survive another defensive coordinator search if Greg Manusky doesn't pan out. In addition, his offense must be better in red-zone and late-game situations, and he has to create big-play opportunities now without DeSean Jackson as a deep threat. But overall, Gruden has done good work. In the process, he has acquired more power and influence than most developing NFL head coaches.

Washington has been purposely vague about its organizational chart since the firing of former general manager Scot McCloughan. Allen continues to have final say on all decisions. No one holds the GM title anymore. Doug Williams, the senior vice president of player personnel, is regarded as the team's top day-to-day football operations executive. But when you really examined roles, the team has three people on virtually the same level: Williams, Gruden and Eric Schaffer, the senior vice president of football operations. In essence, Williams is responsible for leading the scouts and finding talent. Schaffer handles contracts and the business side of managing the roster. And Gruden is ultimately the vision of the team now; this thing is being built the way he prefers it. He's not in charge, but his voice is being heard.

When McCloughan missed the NFL Scouting Combine, Gruden was impressive in leading the player interviews. He continued to contribute heavily in free agency and in putting the final touches on the team's draft plan. Washington had a solid offseason, and Gruden was a bigger part of the process than ever.

Besides his rising influence, the coach also plans to call the offensive plays again, something he hasn't done since his first season. He made that decision after former offensive coordinator Sean McVay became the Los Angeles Rams' head coach. This season is now a test of how much Gruden can balance all of his duties. He's the head coach, the offensive coordinator and an unofficial member of the front office.

It's interesting because as a first-year head coach three years ago, Gruden tried to do too much — head coach, coordinator, quarterbacks coach — and realized he needed to delegate. As more of a CEO, Gruden has led Washington to two winning records.

Now he's back to juggling. The difference is that he has evolved as a head coach. He's better. He thinks he has a better overall coaching staff. And he knows his limits.

"Yeah, that'll be the trick," Gruden said. "How well I handle that will be how successful I will probably be as a coordinator calling plays and as a coach. I feel good about the staff that I have around me. Coach Manusky and Jim Tomsula and Torrian Gray on the defensive side of the ball, I don't think I have to worry so much about that. Ben Kotwica, Bret Munsey on the special teams. The big thing is I have got to be involved in the football game, make sure I'm ready for the red flag tosses and all that good stuff, but for the most part, I have confidence in the defense and special team coaches and players. I can really focus on the offense on game day but also have a good general understanding of what's going on defense and special teams. Being in my fourth year, I feel confident that I can handle that."

You know Gruden is confident when he's relaxed and joking. He's one of the most self-deprecating coaches in the NFL. He has learned how to be demanding and still have fun with the players. As a result, Washington has a healthy culture in the locker room, which Gruden is proud of, but he isn't satisfied.

"That's something that you have to continue to preach and work on," Gruden said of the team's culture. "You know, it's not something you can just sweep under the rug and say our culture is set. You have to continue to preach what you want and get it out of them day in and day out."

Later, Gruden added: "The character of this football team is the strongest it's ever been, I believe."

Washington is operating on two levels right now. There's the possibility of the present. And then there's the uncertainty of the future. Gruden is focused on the now, and he hopes you will be, too. He can't make up your mind, but he will lighten the mood.

For Redskins Coach Jay Gruden, in some cases, less is more

By Jerry Brewer, The Washington Post
August 5, 2017

RICHMOND — Here at Camp Svelte, the Washington Redskins boast many fitness feats. Trent Williams, the star left tackle, went [somewhat] vegan and lost his jolly cushioning. Junior Galette, the snakebit linebacker, dropped 24 pounds after recovering from two Achilles' tendon tears that robbed him of the past two seasons. Rob Kelley, the running back wrongfully nicknamed "Fat Rob" as a child, now looks like he ought to go by "Non-Fat Rob."

In the background stands Coach Jay Gruden, celebrating his players' commitment and flashing an aw-shucks grin when he is asked about his own transformation. Gruden is quietly disappearing, too. You see it in the cheekbones resurfacing on his face. You see it in the absence of his tummy, which must have been shipped to the Bermuda Triangle.

At the end of last season, Gruden weighed 241 pounds. On Monday, he reported proudly that he is down to 218. It's the lightest he has been since 1991, when he was a 24-year-old, 215-pound quarterback starting his Arena Football League career with the Tampa Bay Storm.

"You want to know how I did it?" Gruden said, smiling. "You're going to have to pay extra for that, man. You're going to have to YouTube my video, and it's going to cost you $39.95."

Gruden will get to the "how" later. It's the "why" that matters most to him.

While his players alter their bodies to compete in a game full of world-class athletes, Gruden has a more relatable motivation. He was aching because of the extra weight on his 6-foot-2 frame. His blood pressure was high. He was a little embarrassed. He turned 50 in March, and he was tired of making excuses. He needed to do something or risk slipping from husky to obese.

"I just didn't feel healthy," Gruden said. "I hit 50 years old, and maybe it was part midlife crisis. I don't know. Who knows? You start looking around, and people are walking the streets, and you see people that are your age, and they look better and younger and healthier. And you're like, '[Expletive], I shouldn't be this big.'"

Two years ago, CBS Sports radio host Scott Ferrall called Gruden a "fat ass" on the air. After learning of the cheap shot, Gruden referenced it during his next news conference. The comical coach tried to have fun with it, but the words bothered him.

"I really dislike the guy that called me a fat ass," Gruden said then with a laugh. "That really ticked me off. I don't mind you critiquing my coaching style, but to make fun of my weight, that's unfair. I'm only 225."

As he recalled the exchange last week, Gruden was still upset.

"I've never considered myself, like, fat," he said. "I know I'm thick and a little heavy at times."

A more persuasive comment came at the end of last season. Anthony Lanier, a young defensive end who needs to add weight and strength to realize his potential, was honest with Gruden.

"Man, Coach, you're too big right now," Lanier said.

The coach and player made a bet. Gruden vowed to lose as much weight, if not more, than Lanier gained. Gruden won. He is down 23 pounds. Lanier is up 22.

"But he's not paying me," Gruden said, jokingly cursing at the player. "I told him I'll take the money when he gets his next contract."

Gruden won't charge $39.95 for his weight-loss secrets because he didn't really do anything special. Over the past few months, he has paid more attention to what he is eating and begun exercising. That's it, basically. He started by supplementing his breakfast with "a shot of apple cider vinegar" in the morning. That helped him lose four pounds in the first week or so. Since then, he has been committed to a balanced diet and regular exercise. He has been amazed at the results.

"I did it because I was sore all over," Gruden said. "My joints were sore. My ankle, my knee. I've had shoulder issues. And I've used that as an excuse for not working out or exercising. Then I lost an initial four pounds. I felt a lot better, and then I kept going. I started eating better, watching portion control, not eating late at night. And then the more I lost, the better my joints felt, so I was able to exercise more. It's amazing."

For years, Gruden thought football — multiple injuries, multiple surgeries — was to blame for his aches. He would wake up some mornings and struggle to walk to the bathroom because his Achilles' tendon was sore. He had platelet-rich plasma injections in his knees. He took anti-inflammatory medication to get through the daily grind of coaching. But now that he is almost back to his playing weight, he feels good.

It sounds easy, but in a reality all too familiar to many people [myself included], it's easier to remain unaware and mindlessly punish your body by indulging in the wrong foods and save the workouts for another day. Despite being a former high-level athlete, Gruden succumbed to bad habits.

Food is always available at the team's practice facility in Ashburn, and Gruden munched often. His job is active for about two hours of practice, but the bulk of his day is spent in meetings and sitting in rooms watching film late into the night.

"The choices that you have at lunch and dinner are pretty big at our place," Gruden said. "I would go out and have a sensible lunch, and then we'd always have pizza there, and I'd take a couple of pieces of pizza, and I'd take a cookie upstairs.

"Now I just have a small plate and I get the hell out of there, as much as I want to eat the pizza because it's so damn good."

During training camp, Gruden used to bike 3½ miles from the hotel in Richmond to the team's site. This year, he started walking every morning. Then he advanced to jogging and walking. On Monday, he ran the entire way for the first time. Earlier in camp, he played quarterback and danced in the pocket for the entirety of a long pass rush drill. He is not a coach who has to stand back and evaluate anymore.

"Last year, I couldn't do any of that," Gruden said. "I didn't do any of that hardly because I was sore. Last year, I couldn't even walk from the hotel to work. I never even tried walking it. Now I ran the whole way, and I didn't stop. That's how good my joints feel."

Gruden looked away and said softly, "Let's hope I don't put it back on, because it's easy to put back on."

Acknowledging the threat is the first step to resistance. Besides, at Camp Svelte, there is ample peer pressure to keep Skinny Gruden — or, better yet, Healthy Gruden — motivated.

Gruden, back to calling plays, draws on lifetime of experience

By Nora Princiotti, The Washington Times
September 6, 2017

The Nashville Kats were on their way to winning the Arena Football League's Eastern Division in the summer of 1997. Jay Gruden, a 30-year-old rookie offensive coordinator with a head of shaggy brown hair, a bright smile and puffy cheeks, toiled along their sidelines.

Nashville's defensive coordinator Pat Sperduto, a longtime friend and former teammate of Gruden's, walked over to talk before a game. In his hand, Sperduto clutched his call sheet, meticulously organized with plays for different personnel groupings and downs and distances, all typed up and laminated.

"Hey, where's your call sheet?" Sperduto asked Gruden.

Gruden sunk his hand into one of his pockets and retrieved a crumpled page of yellow legal paper. Grinning, he presented it to Sperduto.

"What is that?" Sperduto said.

"Oh, just some plays for me to remember," Gruden replied.

A few scribbled notes were all Gruden needed to supplement his gut and an almost photographic memory for football plays.

"He just has 'it,'" says Sperduto, now a scout for the Kansas City Chiefs. "Whatever 'it' is — as far as just a feel and an understanding — it's pretty impressive."

"It" passes through Gruden's synapses on Redskins Sundays now.

When the Redskins kick off their 2017 season on Sunday at FedEx Field against the Philadelphia Eagles, Gruden will again be calling the plays on offense, after letting Sean McVay handle those duties the past two years.

Led by its passing game, Washington has had back-to-back winning seasons for the first time in two decades and yet, it seems the organization could be heading in any direction. Last year, the defense was among the league's worst. The Redskins missed the playoffs. Kirk Cousins' future with the franchise remains uncertain.

If Gruden can keep Washington's offense near the top of the league for a third-consecutive year, that "it" factor might become the most compelling reason for Cousins to stay.

Gruden's life has prepared him well for this task. He began cataloging route concepts in his mind as a kid, watching Joe Montana run Bill Walsh's offense. Over more than three decades of playing and coaching in college, the Arena League and the NFL, he developed quick pattern recognition. In hundreds of conversations with his brother Jon — in the driveway, on the phone, and from the press box into Jon's earpiece on the Tampa Bay sideline — he spitballed ideas for how to break a defense.

There are traces of all those experiences in Washington's offense today.

The origins of a Gruden offense

Gruden got to see the West Coast offense revolutionize the NFL in real time. In 1977, he watched Montana quarterback Notre Dame to a national championship when his dad, Jim, was a running backs coach for the Irish. In 1982, after Jim moved the family to Tampa for a job with the Buccaneers, Jay still had a close tie to Montana through Freddie Solomon, the 49ers wide receiver (and the primary target on “The Catch”) who spent his off-seasons there.

As a high schooler with NFL ambitions, Gruden spent his off-seasons working out with Solomon, learning the same lessons in fundamentals, quarterback play and route-running that Solomon, a former quarterback, was getting from Bill Walsh the other seven months of the year.

“It was through their Super Bowl runs,” Gruden says. “Freddie Solomon was there, Jerry Rice. But Joe Montana was the main guy, he and Bill Walsh were the guys that I really studied and followed because that’s who we wanted to win, you know?”

Gruden’s time in the AFL helped him think creatively about play design and hone his innate ability for calling games, but he says the spacing of the field — about a third of the size of a regulation field — is so different from the “outdoor game,” that the schematics don’t transfer over. Instead, Gruden inherited the “core concepts and fundamental beliefs” of the Redskins passing game, and some of the running game from his brother’s coaching tree.

“The Paul Hacketts and Mike Holmgren and obviously Bill Walsh, all those guys that [Jon] learned from and he used, I learned from him and were engraved in my head,” Gruden says.

Watch the Redskins this season and you’ll still see a lot of quick passes, high-percentage throws and three- or five-step drops. You’ll see Gruden get his running backs involved in the passing game. In an average season, his NFL offenses have thrown 83 passes to running backs and gained 518 yards on those plays.

“They’re going to hit all areas of the field. You know, we’re going to get screens, naked, boots, all the things that come off the running game,” said Bengals coach Marvin Lewis, the head coach in Cincinnati when Gruden was offensive coordinator there from 2011-13.

You’ll also see concepts that Gruden has developed on his own, particularly in the deep passing game where he’s come up with route combinations that are more Madden than Montana.

His designs have helped Cousins, who led the league with 4.85 air yards per passing attempt and completed 47.5 percent of passes that traveled 20 yards or further last season, grow from a game manager into an effective deep thrower.

That is, in part, a product of the personnel — you can’t nickel and dime with DeSean Jackson — but Gruden has long been a clever architect with the deep ball.

“We had no vertical passing game [in Tampa] until he got here,” Jon Gruden says. “I can remember Jay coming up with some routes — you can’t just run a straight go route, you can’t just run a deep cross every time, you have to come up with some different types of vertical passes — and Jay was really good at helping us do that.”

Jon posits that the AFL did influence his brother schematically in at least one way. Receivers can’t run out of bounds in the AFL because, when Jay played and coached, there were only inches of space between the sidelines and the hockey-style boards enclosing the arena. Running straight down the field wasn’t a good option.

“You’d run right into the boards and break your neck,” Jon Gruden says. “Know what I mean? But, you can start across the field, and then put your foot in the ground and then go back deep where you came from to the opposite pylon.”

When Jon Gruden finally coaxed his brother into coaching with him in Tampa in 2002, Jay used his understanding of spacing and leverage to come up with all sorts of deep angles, routes called rage or star routes, or code reds.

“He came up with all these crazy vertical double moves that I certainly hadn’t thought of,” Jon Gruden says.

A long history of calling plays

This offseason, Gruden has fielded a legion of questions about his return to calling plays. His responses have contained traces of confusion and annoyance, like he’s being asked over and over if he’s comfortable breathing.

His brother’s reaction is sharper.

“If Jay Gruden’s not as good a play-caller as anybody in the league, I mean, I disagree,” Jon Gruden says. “I know what he knows, I know what he’s done and I know what his role has been in Washington. It’s not like he just stood there with his foot in his mouth the last two years. Come on. I mean, give me a break.”

Gruden was the Redskins’ offensive play-caller in 2014 before McVay was given that title and responsibility. He called plays in Cincinnati, too. Finding the start of Gruden’s play-calling days, though, requires going back much further. Back even before he was on the sideline in Nashville. Back to when he was a player.

Gruden chose Louisville for college in part because of coach Howard Schnellenberger’s prostyle offense, which asked a lot of him as a young quarterback. And when he was with the Tampa Bay Storm, coach Lary Kuharich insisted that quarterbacks call their plays.

“I don’t know if there’s many people out there that have that ability like Jay does where it just came so easy and so natural to him,” says Sperduto. In addition to coaching with Gruden in Nashville, Sperduto was one of his linemen in Tampa Bay. As teammates, they won multiple ArenaBowl championships in the early 1990s. It was clear from being in the huddle with Gruden, Sperduto says, that he knew how to minimize an opponent’s best pass rusher or motion to get a mismatch, and that it all came naturally to him at game-speed.

By the time Gruden was calling plays off crumpled sheets of paper in Nashville, he was already comfortable as a play-caller.

“He was very aware of everything that was going on in the game, and he knew how to attack personnel, knew a great deal about the opponent’s personnel and where the weak spots were,” says Ed Khayat, the former Redskins, Eagles and [Boston] Patriots defensive lineman who hired Gruden as coach of the Kats in 1997.

When Jay Gruden joined his brother’s Buccaneers as an offensive assistant in 2002, he got a chance to use that awareness in the NFL game. Jon and Jay Gruden were connected by their headsets, Jon on the sideline and Jay watching from the press box, for seven years. Even in his first year with the team, Jay Gruden didn’t hesitate to speak up during a critical situation.

Jon Gruden remembers one play, during Super Bowl XXXVII, which the Buccaneers won 48-21 against the Oakland Raiders, where Jay’s “it” factor was on display. The Bucs were already up 10 points before halftime and, facing a first-and-goal from the Raiders’ 5-yard line, Jay Gruden’s voice shot into Jon’s earpiece.

“Hey! Get to 374 Wasp!”

Jon Gruden called it. Bucs wide receiver Keenan McCardell split out wide to the right and ran a fly route right at Raiders cornerback Charles Woodson, then stopped. Quarterback Brad Johnson made the throw, and McCardell caught it over his back shoulder for a touchdown.

“It stung them pretty good,” Jon says.

The task this year

Right now, the Redskins’ future is murky. The offseason was defined by changes made to the defense, which must improve for the team to have success. But, if Washington remains in the playoff picture and posts a third-consecutive winning season, it’ll likely be for the same reason as last two: they scored points.

Should those things happen, the comfort of an offense that’s helped him pass for 4,000 yards in back-to-back seasons and a coach who has backed him and helped him succeed may be the Redskins’ best chance to convince Cousins to stay.

It’s not fair to put that all on Gruden, but what’s fair is not always what’s relevant at Redskins Park. It’s also not accurate to say that Washington needs only to recreate its offensive output of the last two seasons to have success.

“We’ve got to figure out a way to be balanced,” Gruden says. “Not just at the beginning of the year but at the end of the year. I think sometimes when you have so many weapons, everybody’s like ‘Man, Jordan. Jamison. Josh. Terrelle. Just throw the ball every snap.’ But I think our offense is best when we can run the ball, be physical.”

Historically, Gruden hasn’t been as pass-happy as his reputation indicates.

Only twice in the last six seasons has a Gruden offense ranked in the top half of the league by passing play percentage.

One of those seasons was 2016 in Washington, however, when the Redskins threw more often than all but seven other teams. That imbalance put up numbers, but it also led to problems, most acutely in the red zone. The Redskins were 30th in the league in touchdown percentage inside the 20-yard line where Cousins' completion percentage dropped from 67 to 45.78.

"I think Jay's one of those guys that's going to go off feel," says starting running back Rob Kelley. "If he feels like we're killing in the run game he's going to run it. If he feels like we're picking up in the pass game he's going to pass it. He's one of those guys where you've got to show him that you can stop it."

The Redskins will try to rededicate themselves to the ground game. If that succeeds, they hope it will help their play action game as well, a strength of Cousins'. Beyond those things, the Redskins offense won't look terribly different this year to the average viewer.

"It's always been Jay's offense at the end of the day," Cousins says. "So, even though Sean was involved in the past the fact that Jay is the one calling it now, there's not a lot of change because it was always Jay's system. And he was very involved in the game-planning and even in the game-day play calling decisions."

And yes, they will still throw the fade.

"I only called it like six times all year, for God's sakes," Gruden says. "It's just they were 0-for-6."

Self-deprecation aside, he's serious.

"Just watch Cincinnati tape," Gruden says. "The reason I'm sitting here today is because we threw the fade."

"He loves the fade," confirms A.J. Green.

A constant competitor

Gruden still uses the word "quit" to describe his decision to go into coaching. Back then, in 1997, his goal of playing quarterback in the NFL still felt within his reach. He had a young family to support, though, and wanted to give them security. Had he gotten hurt playing, he'd have lost his source of income.

Khayat offered him a $57,000 guaranteed salary as offensive coordinator in Nashville. Gruden took it.

Gruden is glad he made the choice to give his wife, Sherry, and their three boys stability. He was around to coach his sons' basketball teams and go to their school events. Still, stepping off the field was hard.

"I loved playing so much," Gruden says.

It was hard to walk away because it didn't make sense to Gruden that multiple AFL titles as a player hadn't gotten him more than a developmental squad stint with the Dolphins that was so short he never got a playbook.

"He's still bitter that he never got a shot in the NFL," Jon Gruden says. "I still think he's mad at me because I didn't sign him as a player. He said, 'What do you mean, coach? I'm better than Donald Hollas! I can still hear him saying 'I can beat out Ty Detmer in Philadelphia!'"

Gruden's aw-shucks exterior sometimes masks this, but he's a competitor who sees everything as an opportunity to show he's a winner. Sperduto recalls 20-minute arguments over who called a "Jeopardy!" answer first. At the NFL Combine this March, Gruden sought him out in the stands of Lucas Oil Stadium and told him to download Words With Friends "so I can whoop your ass!"

Competitive banter has always been a hallmark of Gruden's personality. He's the same person he was in his 20s playing for the Storm, teasing Sperduto and his other linemen after they let him take a hit.

"You honestly felt guilty not protecting him to the fullest," says Sperduto, recalling the pit he'd feel in his stomach watching Gruden pick himself up off the turf. "You really felt like it was letting him down. I'm Italian, I've got that Italian mother guilt complex, he plays on that big time. Like, 'Don't worry, I don't need my back.'"

"You'd feel so guilty!" Sperduto recalls.

As a coach, Gruden still motivates with that biting sense of humor. When Gruden came to Washington in 2014, some players mistook his easy demeanor for a lack of discipline or intensity. Now entering his fourth season, his contract extended through 2020, Gruden has grown comfortable being in control.

"I'm comfortable with people around me," Gruden says. "We have a great staff and I've gotten to know the players. My first year here I didn't know anybody, player-wise. Nobody. And they're set in their ways and 'Well, we didn't do it like this last year.' But I think everybody's gotten to know me a little bit more and I think everybody's more comfortable being around each other."

Now, the Redskins often describe Gruden as a player's coach. Most in the locker room feel a sense of loyalty to him. They say he hasn't forgotten what it's like to be in their shoes.

"When they don't succeed I take it hard," Gruden says. "I feel like I let them down."

There are complications to having "it." Expectations for the talented can lead to extreme personal demands. Did he do enough? Did he do it right? Even though he was the one to call for 374 Wasp, Gruden keeps his Super Bowl XXXVII ring locked away at home because he doesn't think his contribution earned it.

Dozens of people and thousands of hours have helped Gruden get to where he is now. His innate ability, along with a few disorganized notes, began his run from coaching for stability to chasing a Super Bowl ring he can call his own. He has formulated one of the league's top offenses as the primary mode to get there, creating both a benefit and complication with his starting quarterback. The upbeat presence of a rookie coordinator remains. It's the surroundings and demands that have changed.

DL JONATHAN ALLEN

'Like playing with Superman:' The story of Redskins first-round pick Jonathan Allen's high school career

By Jacob Bogage, The Washington Post
May 1, 2017

As Jonathan Allen dropped through the first round of the NFL Draft, Cameron Reynolds watched and waited and kept his eye on that Washington Redskins logo getting larger at the bottom of the screen.

Reynolds, one of Allen's close friends and former teammates for Stone Bridge High School in Ashburn, remembers when Washington players would show up at their high school games. The Redskins' training facility is only 10 minutes away. He and Allen used to fantasize about playing in "The League" — the NFL. Now the Alabama defensive tackle and three-time All-Met selection was still on the board, and the Redskins were announcing their draft choice.

"My heart sank," said Reynolds, a linebacker at Shepherd University in West Virginia. "It's unbelievable. He could have gone to any of the other teams, but he's coming home. I never really have time to go to Redskins games. Now I have reason to make a reason to go."

Stone Bridge Coach Mickey Thompson went to Philadelphia to see the draft in person. Allen was projected to be a top-five pick. Then he fell into Washington's lap at No. 17.

"Never in a million years did we think he would be there at 17, but we're happy as heck he was," Redskins Coach Jay Gruden said.

"Everybody has been really excited around here, and it's only picked up since he got picked by the Redskins," Thompson said. "I think it's going to be a great fit overall in the long run."

Allen arrived at Stone Bridge as a 6-foot-2, 180-pound 14 year-old. Thompson loved his height and athleticism, and slotted him at wide receiver and linebacker. When the Bulldogs coaches saw his skill tracking down ball carriers, they moved him to defensive end where he amassed 44 sacks in three seasons.

He went from a lanky speed rusher to a 260-pound bulldozer by his senior season. The first game of the year against Robinson, Allen brought down a rusher so hard, it sounded like a gunshot, Reynolds said. The hit separated one of Allen's shoulders. He still finished the game with 15 tackles, three passes defended and a blocked punt.

"Playing with him was like playing with Superman," Reynolds said.

The next day at school, Allen arrived in his first period history class with an extra book bag full of letters from college football programs. The school set up a special mailbox for him in the main office just to handle college inquiries.

Allen went through each one looking for a letter from Alabama, Reynolds said: "These are schools like West Virginia, Florida State, Clemson. But he said, 'Nope. Not 'Bama.'"

Allen's family was united with a single message during his recruiting process: If you really think you're the best, go play with the best, his brother Richard Allen Jr., said. That meant the Southeastern Conference and the Crimson Tide.

2017 FEATURE CLIPS

Playing college football video games as a kid, Alabama was Jonathan Allen's team of choice, his brother said. When the Alabama offer came, it was clear which school Allen would choose.

He won a College Football Playoff national championship and three Southeastern Conference championships with the Crimson Tide, was named the conference's defensive player of the year and won the Bronko Nagurski award, an honor given to the nation's top defensive player.

Allen's resume propelled him to the top of most draft boards, but he fell to the back half of the first round after late-diagnosed shoulder tendinitis, and an early run on offensive players in the top 16. Any health concerns didn't stop the Redskins from snagging him with their first round selection.

"That's Jonathan's favorite team growing up. My parents' favorite team, my new favorite team," Richard Allen said.

Allen recalled rooting for the Redskins as a kid, he told The Post on draft night, and attending the first day of training camp at Redskins Park to watch Donovan McNabb play. "It's crazy I'm going to be out there playing with them," Allen said.

For Thompson, the draft choice means having the biggest name in the history of Loudoun County football come home. He'll be able to see new generations of Stone Bridge players under Friday night lights.

"Not only is he going to have this legendary status at Stone Bridge, but he is going to be accessible to us at Stone Bridge," Thompson said. "He's going to be right here. You're going to be able to touch him."

LB RYAN ANDERSON

That time Ryan Anderson shoved Jameis Winston, displaying a fire that still burns

By John Keim, ESPN.com
May 17, 2017

ASHBURN, Va. -- The game wasn't going well and the opposing quarterback, who happened to be future No. 1 overall pick Jameis Winston, reminded him of his struggles. With a subtle gesture.

It was just a seven-on-seven game before Ryan Anderson's senior year of high school. But it served as a symbol for his fire -- and Winston was the target. Anderson, transitioning at the time to inside linebacker, had made some mistakes.

"I was struggling with some coverage stuff and they were beating us and he was the No. 1 quarterback," Anderson said. "They had an angle route on me and they scored. They came back out for the two-point conversion and [Winston] winked at me."

Anderson, naturally, wasn't in the mood.

"So they run a crossing route and he lobbed it to the receiver," Anderson said, "and I just tried to kill him."

Winston's team didn't take too kindly to Anderson drilling a receiver.

"Both teams cleared the bench," Anderson said. "There were a few words said."

There were no punches, but plenty of shoves between Anderson and Winston. Both have matured in their careers -- Winston is entering his third year with Tampa Bay; the Washington Redskins drafted Anderson in the second round last month -- and that game is now just a humorous anecdote.

"He's a good friend of mine," Anderson said of Winston. "I ain't talked to him in a minute, but he's a good dude."

But that fire is partially why the Redskins liked Anderson enough to draft him. He made plays at outside linebacker, too, which obviously helps. However, that nasty demeanor also makes a difference. Anderson said he's all about football.

"I grew up loving and watching this game," Anderson said. "I'm a big football fan. Those guys instilled a certain mentality in my head as to how this game is supposed to be played. I try to keep that same approach, try to keep it about football. I don't think about the money. I try to do what I love. It's a blessing."

Anderson turned that approach into a starting job at Alabama on a defense loaded with talent. What he didn't do, coach Nick Saban said, is use it in a negative way by drawing silly penalties. Rather, teammates viewed Anderson as a tone-setter, whether in practice or games.

"It was never a negative," Saban said by phone. "We're talking about a guy who never had issues off the field. He was never a guy that got a lot of emotional, undisciplined penalties. He's a real strong competitor; great character, plays hard and is tough. He tries to dominate the guy he's playing against."

Anderson said his goals at the Redskins' rookie minicamp last weekend were simple: Show that he could retain the defense (and get in better shape). But he also wanted to show others the proper approach.

"Effort, run to the ball, don't loaf and try to get guys going with me," Anderson said.

It's what he did at Alabama.

"He was a leader," Saban said. "He was well-respected by teammates and he cared about guys on the team. It showed in how he tried to help teach the sort of standard in how we wanted to do things here. He set a good example for the most part as a practice player."

And he displayed that fire even in offseason competitions long ago versus Winston. Anderson wasn't the fastest outside linebacker -- he was timed in the 40-yard dash at 4.78 seconds. But he was considered a better player than workout guy. It took him until last season to earn a full-time starting job; he responded with nine sacks and 19 tackles for a loss. He attributes his success to his mindset, a fire that was displayed long ago.

"That's why I'm where I am now," Anderson said. "I'll never change that."

LB WILL COMPTON

Redskins' Will Compton gives back in Bonne Terre

By Jim Thomas, St. Louis Post-Dispatch

BONNE TERRE, MO. • They ran around huge truck tires, hopped over tackling dummies, fell on fumbles, caught passes — just about everything you'd expect at a youth football camp.

The guest instructors, five of them at least, were members of the Washington Redskins, which seemed strange here in the middle of the Missouri Lead Belt on the day before Mother's Day. Until, that is, you looked at the T-shirts worn by the 130 campers who ranged in age from third grade through eighth grade:

"Create Your Own Destiny. Will Compton Football Camp."

Undrafted out of Nebraska in 2013, Compton started most of the past two seasons at middle linebacker for Washington. He was a team captain last season, registering a career-high 125 tackles during a breakout campaign.

As such, he's the headliner in Bonne Terre's first family of sports.

It's basically unanimous in the Compton household that most of the family's athletic DNA comes from Mom. Kathey Compton starred in volleyball, softball, and track in high school, growing up in tiny Gower near St. Joseph on the western side of the state. She went on to play college volleyball at Missouri Western.

Kathey's husband, Bill, was an amateur body builder who once owned a gym in nearby Park Hills that served as the family business.

Wyatt, the youngest of their three sons, played a year of college football at Southeast Missouri State and now is a student assistant coach at Colorado Mesa University.

Of course, there's oldest son Will, who's on the verge of big things with Washington.

But the star of the family growing up was middle son Cody, a gifted wrestler.

"When Cody was 5, he placed fifth in a national tournament in wrestling," Kathey said. "So we traveled all over the country with him. He wrestled every year for the Missouri dual team and the national team. I mean, he was really good.”

Cody won a state wrestling title at North County Desloge High as a senior. At senior nationals that year, he made a deal with Mom and Dad. If he finished first at nationals, he could get a tattoo. Kathey was adamantly against the idea of a tattoo, but since you had to be a state champion just to qualify for the tournament, she thought it was a safe bet in such a stacked field of competitors.

Cody finished first, and there’s a tattoo of — surprise — a wrestler on his back.

“Cody was the one that kind of was recruited young, and everybody had their eye on,” Kathey said. “It was like, ‘Oh, his brother plays football, too. Isn’t that nice.’”

But that all started to change one summer weekend about 10 years ago. Bill was with Cody, who was wrestling for the Missouri National team at an event in Kansas.

Kathey went with Will to Purdue for a Nike football camp for college prospects. She was surprised, maybe a little stunned, at the speed and athletic ability of the other campers. So much so that when her husband called to check on how things were going, she replied, “I think we just wasted a six-hour drive.”

Well, imagine how she felt when Will was named MVP of the camp.

“I’m not kidding, as soon as we got to the car [to drive home], there were like five coaches on the phone that wanted to talk to Will about coming to school,” she said. “It was the craziest thing we had ever experienced in our lives. It was literally like overnight.”

Until that point, Will was getting looks from smaller Division I programs. After the Nike camp, the likes of Missouri, Illinois, Notre Dame and Nebraska got in on the act.

It was all but understood that whoever got Will for football would also get Cody — one year younger — as a wrestler. It ended up being Nebraska where Will had a very good career for the Cornhuskers in football.

Cody, meanwhile, was slowed by multiple concussions and a torn labrum. He finished 32-8 for the Huskers in a shortened college career and now is an assistant wrestling coach at Farmington High who spends his summers working camps for Purler Wrestling all over the country.

No one’s prouder of Will’s success than Cody.

“What really set him apart from everybody else was just how intelligent he was on the field,” Cody said. “For me, looking at him and all the success he’s had, it was kind of expected.”

“He’s always worked hard and did all the right things. He took off about a year and a half ago. Washington gave him his opportunity and he ran with it, and he hasn’t looked back since. He’s been doing great.”

Washington had its rookie minicamp last weekend, meaning Will was free to come back home for his annual football camp. He brought along four teammates to help — defensive end Trent Murphy, nose tackle Kedric Golston and linebackers Houston Bates and Martrell Spaight.

Lavonte David, the Pro Bowl linebacker for Tampa Bay and a former Nebraska teammate, has worked the camp in the past.

But there was also a hometown feel when it came to the other instructors and volunteers, such as Will’s little league coach, Terry Cole.

“My first year when I got into the [NFL] I was on practice squad and stuff,” Will said. “But a goal of mine I had within a year of being in the league, I wanted to make a point to give back to my community in a way that I can give them things I learned, and just influence the youth. I wanted to hold a football camp.”

Will comes across as a serious type, and it doesn’t take much imagination to see how that might translate into an intense type on the football field.

He was all over the place Saturday, encouraging the youngsters in his raspy voice, posing for pictures, shaking hands with old friends, even making sure the instructors had water on a warm day.

Kathey pretty much supervised the whole thing, down to helping hand out pizza and snacks to the campers in the high school gym afterward. Cody was there all day, and Bill dropped in to see how things were going.

“My mom, as you saw her working around, she’s kind of the wonder woman behind all of it,” Will said. “She makes all of it go and work.”

Will likes coming home whenever he can. He bought a home in Bonne Terre just six blocks from his parents. Like the entire town, he lives over the tunnels and shafts of the old lead mine.

“If we have an earthquake, we’re doomed,” Kathey laughed.

Whether it’s Hub’s Pub and Grill, the Shamrock Restaurant and Lounge, or the Space Museum, basically everyone in the town of 6,800 knows the Compton family, especially Bonne Terre’s favorite son. You know, the NFL linebacker.

“Everybody definitely knows us, and everybody for sure knows Will,” Cody says. “It’s always a hassle going to WalMart when Will’s in town.”

QB KIRK COUSINS

Kirk Cousins Believes. But Does Anyone Else?

By Clay Skipper, GO
Aug. 28, 2017

During the summer, Kirk Cousins lives in his parents’ basement. So this is where you’ll find the Washington Redskins quarterback on a beautiful, bright July morning. He made nearly $20 million throwing footballs last year. His much-talked-about, one-year deal for this season will net him another $23.9 million. Still, for a good portion of the offseason, the eminently practical Cousins holes up beneath the floorboards of his teenage home in Holland, Michigan—a white, clapboard split-level on a street that ends in a cul de sac. He shares the space with his wife, Julie, who’s pregnant with their first child, a boy. The early months of the year are spent in a warmer climate: the basement of Julie’s parents’ place, just northeast of Atlanta. “It works well,” says Cousins. “We don’t pay rent.”

The 29-year-old, wearing a summer tan and a shade of stubble, is readying himself for a workout while his family pads around upstairs. When he’s home, Cousins doesn’t like wasting time traveling to the gym and—like a sensible Millennial with roommate-parents—is happy to work out in the driveway. There, his trainer, Joe, will put him through an exercise circuit. Before they get going, though, Cousins is limbering up downstairs with a gray metal contraption that looks like a set of monkey bars caught in the act with a bell-hop’s dolly.

Under Joe’s direction, he moves through a progression of stretches, his bright, blue-green eyes narrowing into a serious stare, grunting his exhalations as he leans more deeply into each. It is not long before he is interrupted by another member of the basement gym. Kirk’s mom MaryAnn—who will tease about her son’s intensity, saying maybe she diapered him too tightly—drops in. “I was peeking to find out when it was my turn on the elliptical,” she says upon seeing the room occupied by her NFL quarterback son who threw for nearly 5,000 yards last season.

She doesn’t have to wait long; Cousins, now loose, heads upstairs to the garage where he keeps his fleet of cars: a 2000 GMC Savana conversion van that he bought from his grandma—he calls it “The Gray Ghost,” or “Gandalf, The Grey”—and the “new” 2006 Mercedes S65 AMG he bought last offseason. “I always wanted a fast car, a nice car,” he’ll tell me. “I couldn’t justify the hundred-thousand-dollar car.”

Cousins’s real workout begins between his two rides, in accordance with a new-wave program called Applied Functional Science. It’s a series of full-body contortions heavy in resistance bands and exercise balls that’s designed to boost his conditioning and movement. In one exercise, Cousins and I stand facing each other, pulling on opposite ends of a band, trying to yank the other off-balance. “I moved my feet a little bit,” he says breathlessly at one point—though I never saw him slip—before shouting, “HONESTY IS GOOD FOR THE SOUL!”

I think it’s a joke, until I realize it’s not. This is the Cousins we’ve glimpsed in viral sound bites—“You Like That” Kirk himself—in all his extraordinarily eager glory. What I’ll learn from my time with Cousins is that this tenderhearted, almost clumsy intensity is always there, even when he’s away from the field. It makes me realize that we—the football fans, the Twitter trolls, the confused sports pundits—have been asking the wrong question.

We've been too busy questioning his value—wondering how such an impossibly earnest guy became a face-of-a-franchise NFL quarterback paid nearly $24 million—to realize it's the other way around. Kirk Cousins is cashing million dollar checks precisely because he's kind of a dork. The frugality, the shouting-to-God honesty, the old van, the brain training, the superpower he longs for [hint: it involves eating chocolate cake]—these are not quirks so much as steps in a life of extremely intentional design. Kirk Cousins knows exactly who he is, and he's exactly where he believes he should be. And he's about to make you a believer, too.

In the last 24 years, the Washington Redskins have played 24 different quarterbacks. Of those, Kirk Cousins is one of only two to start every game in consecutive seasons. As such, he is likely the best option for a franchise quarterback that the team has had in a quarter century. Only, Washington isn't so sure.

In both of the last two seasons, he has been “franchise tagged,” which is a one-year-only deal that is management-speak for: we like you, we're just not sure we love you. Since the tag's introduction in 1993, he is the only quarterback to receive it in back-to-back seasons. That's in part because it's insanely expensive [nearly $44 million over two years for Cousins]. But it's also because most teams aren't as commitment-phobic as Washington, which remains unsure—even after a “tagged” season in which his numbers put him among the top ten QBs in the league—if he is the guy to build a franchise around. This is the cross Cousins has always had to bear: proving that he's better than you think.

In high school, he wasn't highly recruited. He turned down the only two football scholarships he was offered his junior year, from mid-majors Toledo and Western Michigan, because, in his words, “I couldn't see myself there.” Translated from Midwesterner, that means: I was hoping for better. Then, in Cousins's words, “a miracle”: Michigan State lost its top quarterback recruit during Cousins's senior year and offered him a last-minute scholarship. At MSU, he broke school records for passing yardage and touchdowns. In 2012, when he was drafted by Washington in the fourth round it was with the understanding that he'd serve as a backup to the franchise's newly minted savior, electric talent of a generation Robert Griffin III, who had been taken second overall in the very same draft. Then RGIII's magical rookie season ended with knee surgery. Washington held out hope through 2013 and 2014 that Griffin could find the magic again, allowing Cousins to occasionally test drive the offense without ever handing over the keys. After Griffin's 2015 preseason concussion, Cousins won the starting job—and now, two seasons later, having started 32 of 32 Washington games since, he just might become the guy that the franchise either never thought he could, or never really wanted him to be. Last year he threw for the third-most yards in the league [breaking his own Redskins franchise passing record from 2015], completing nearly 70 percent of his passes and earning his way to the NFL Pro Bowl as an NFC alternate.

But the imperfect calculus that goes into selecting the most visible member of a team involves cultural signifiers as much as it does stats. And Kirk Cousins betrays our expectations of what a superstar quarterback should be. He lacks the electricity of Hail-Mary-slinging, State-Farm-hawking Aaron Rodgers or Versace-tights-wearing, linebacker-bulldozing Cam Newton. And even though QBs Tom Brady and Andrew Luck are dweeby in their own right, you can sense the stone cold killer lurking beneath. But Kirk Cousins? Well, he has all of the quarterback tools, less of the swag that comes with being born with those things.

Last season, wearing a wireless mic in a game against the Packers, Cousins implored his teammates to get in on a sideline “high-five party”—and then, after a touchdown, to “Celebrate! As a team! Celebrate!” Earlier this month, he was recorded at training camp rapping the lyrics to Hamilton, lauding Emily Dickinson's poetry, and praising...water. “Two hydrogens and one oxygen! That's the recipe for good water.” In this year's first preseason game, he walked onto the field singing I Wanna Dance With Somebody as it blared over the PA system.

Or take, as the prime example of Cousins's captivating earnestness, his most notorious moment as an NFL quarterback, born after he'd led the Redskins from a 24-point deficit to a thrilling win on a last-minute touchdown. On his trot to the locker room, Cousins screamed at a CSN reporter, “YOU LIKE THAT! YOU LIKE THAT!” Someone uploaded the moment to Vine, where it has been looped more than 47 million times, studied by fans who've been endlessly delighted and perplexed by Cousins Howard-Dean yawp. He plays with a genuine intensity, but also a confusing guilelessness. In the clip, there's a Redskins employee in a suit tailing Cousins, and even he can't help cracking a grin. His teammates had heard the catchphrase before from Cousins, who'd shouted it in practice. “When he first did it, I thought he was just joking around,” offensive tackle Trent Williams says. “Come to find out, he was dead serious.”

It's never entirely clear if Cousins is in on the joke. [Washington center Spencer Long, one of Cousins's best friends on the team, says that infamous high-five party was Cousins “kind of being facetious.”] He's the type of guy who'd get shoved into a locker in an after-school PSA, but he's playing the position of the guy who does the shoving, beloved by the uber alphas he shares a locker room with, who've voted him captain both at Michigan State and on the Redskins. His Golden Retriever eagerness runs counter to the cynicism that prevails online, but his viral audio proves he's adored there, too. As one Reddit user said during Cousins's AMA, addressing the endearing enigma that is the NFL's 24-million-dollar man, “Kirk, stop making me like you. I'm supposed to hate you.”

The first time I meet Kirk Cousins, he is seated at a wooden table in his apartment/his parents' basement, a sensor clipped to each of his earlobes and a third, blue sensor stuck to the left side of his scalp. He is Facetiming with someone at NeuroPeak Pro, the West Michigan company that markets the system he's wired into. It purports to measure the electrical activity of Cousins's brain, mapping it on a monitor in front of him while he watches a documentary, and the person on the phone is telling Cousins about his High Beta and Theta ratios, before he begins the session. If the computer detects that his brain is not operating in an ideal state of attention, or if he's breathing too quickly, the screen will shrink, the movie will skip, or the sound will cut out. The goal is to improve focus and concentration.

Cousins has sworn by the device since he first started using it in college, and claims that during games he can recalibrate himself into a more focused state. Using a map of his brain waves is one of his means of achieving self-optimization, a belief in body as temple, the way Tom Brady achieves it by not eating nightshades. What makes this demonstration so patently Kirk Cousins is that he's doing it while watching the History Channel's miniseries America: The Story of Us. It's not enough that he's using this half hour to train his brain; he wants to fill it with facts about America while he does.

Cousins believes “anything that makes you a better quarterback is going to make you a better person,” so if he wants to maximize his time, it's because there's only so much time in a day to pursue opportunities for self-betterment. So he spends some of it inside of a hyperbaric chamber, convinced it'll help him play for longer. He has his saliva analyzed by a biochemist and commissioned a blood test to detect food sensitivities, and now sticks to a strict diet [he says his preferred superpower isn't flying or teleportation, but a feat of gastrointestinal wizardry: “You could just down a chocolate cake, burger and fries. But it's like you just put in organic quinoa salad.”]. There's the melatonin to ensure deep rest, and more than 400 nights of sleep data that he's recorded using the same sensors he uses for brain training. [One slightly no-duh pattern, according to the doctor who helps read his logs: the better the defense Cousins is scheduled to play, the worse his sleep on Saturdays in the fall]. Cousins is a man of routine, because routine is improvable, quantifiable, predictable—even if, say, back-to-back offseason contract negotiations aren't. “We want every offseason to be more like clockwork,” he says. “Where it gets a little rhythmic and, if anything, boring.”

Part of that offseason routine—but also during the season, while traveling to and from road games, time that can be wasted if you're not careful—involves reading. Cousins is a maniacal reader, spending hours on end in Barnes & Noble, relentlessly collecting and devouring books. “The accumulation of knowledge is a powerful thing,” he tells me, paraphrasing a quote from one of his favorite books, Bill Walsh's The Score Takes Care of Itself: My Philosophy of Leadership. His books span four subjects: sports, business/investing, leadership, and faith. “I'm not just a reader to read,” he explains.

He'll underline as he goes, then write short reports summarizing key points and important lessons. His notes can stretch to twenty pages—as was the case after he burned through Nike founder Phil Knight's recent memoir, Shoe Dog. ["I may never start a company, but I'm in a pretty unique spot right now," he told me. "Let's treat that like he treated his job with Nike. You know?"]

Three months into dating Julie, he bought a book called 101 Questions to Ask Before You Get Engaged. "We got through most all of them," he says, possibly in jest, but probably not. To Julie, Cousin's methodical approach to courtship—checking through the book's questions like he progresses through receivers downfield—was funny, but also opened her eyes to how the Cousins computer works.

One book Cousins reads or refers to everyday is the Bible, his "playbook for life." Kirk—whose name, his Dad tells me, means "dweller by the church"—makes no secret of his deep Christian faith. He regularly cites scripture while fielding questions, and it's in these moments that his son-of-a-pastor conviction and leading-man potential most shines through, exerting the kind of gravitational pull that commands a huddle.

It's a magnetism he's always had. Consider a story that Cousins's AP Literature teacher, Mark Hiskes, told me. One day, Hiskes mentioned to his students that his wife was traveling to Ghana for a few weeks with a Christian medical aid organization. Cousins, appreciating the bonds of family and worried that his teacher might grow lonely, floated the idea that he and his friend Mike could come over for a cookout that weekend.

"That was a cool idea, but then I thought, 'Well, I'm not sure I want to spend a whole night with two high school guys,'" Hiskes says. He told the ever-earnest Cousins that maybe they should invite a few more people. So Cousins convened all the senior guys in the class and all the senior male teachers for, what he called, with a Cousins-esque lack of irony, a "man party." Those cookouts continued regularly for the next four or five years. "I knew when he went into football, but, particularly the NFL, I said, 'This guy's going to change the NFL before the NFL's going to change him,'" says Hiskes.

If Cousins seems enigmatic, it's because he grew up in a place where his seemingly incongruous qualities can hang together in uncomplicated ways. The quarterback is always the coolest guy in school—but he's also, usually, kind of a dick, and more interested in girls than grades. Instead, Cousins was a stud quarterback and a standout student and kind, as eager to sling touchdowns as he was to parse C.S. Lewis's "The Screwtape Letters" or spend his weekend grilling with teachers. There's another unlikely coherence of ideas in his dual approaches of "I'm going to trust God's plan" and "I'm going to work my ass off just in case." But those qualities abet each other, too. Ceding agency to a higher power isn't an act of dependency for him, but one of empowerment: it liberates him doubt and allows him to concentrate, wholly and ruthlessly, on exerting influence over the things he can control.

"We like to say, 'Pray as if everything depends on God and work as if everything depends on you,'" Cousins tells me. So he spends some quiet time most mornings writing down his hopes into a prayer list—right now, those include a healthy baby, safe passage from Michigan back to D.C., and a smooth ending for his contract saga. He transfers answered prayers to another long list on Apple Notes. It's faith, optimized. He's been doing this for years, the litany of tallied blessings growing longer and more outrageous.

In the afternoon, post-workout, Cousins drives his hulking gray van over to Holland Water Sports to pick up an 18-foot Sea Ray boat he has rented. Though he spends his summers here on the West Michigan shores, Cousins has done the math [of course he has]: It's cheaper for him to rent a watercraft than own one.

With Kirk's cousin Noah at the helm, we pass through Lake Macatawa, which splits Holland in half, out into Lake Michigan. Cutting through the harbor, he points out why there are so many massive boats docked in the area: you could actually go all the way from Chicago, a few hundred miles across the water, straight through to the Atlantic Ocean. It's a factoid related to interstate shipping and the importance of the Great Lakes that was covered earlier that morning in America: The Story of Us. Cousins knows a lot of things.

We drop anchor twenty minutes later, our little boat rocking gently as Lake Michigan slaps its sides. "Look at the water color," Cousins says, the way he says everything, with pure, unbridled enthusiasm, not ever trying to play it cool. "Holy cow. I've never seen it this green-blue."

On a low bluff, about seventy or eighty yards from the boat, just beyond the beach, sits a piece of lakefront property Cousins and Julie purchased this past winter after spotting it on Zillow last summer. They waited to buy because Cousins wanted to see how the season went, to make sure he was "in a place to be a starting quarterback making the salary that a starting quarterback makes." He never expected this career to happen, even if he'd optimized himself to create the best possible chance that it would. Right now, on the parcel, there is only dune grass, an idle backhoe, and a foundation that was poured two weeks ago. Its pain-free construction is in his prayers-to-be-answered list.

Periodically, Kirk and Julie visit the lot and bring lawn chairs so they can watch the sun set over the water, which stretches out to the horizon. When I ask what excites them most about the new place—meaning, like, a slide from the bedroom to the lake, or at least a SodaStream—Cousins says, quickly, "Friends and family gathering there." This is, of course, a clichéd answer—but coming from a man who lives in his teenage basement, it might also be true. So you wonder if now, having his own place where his family can visit him, he feels like he has reached what he set out to find.

"When I was in college, [if] someone had said, 'You're going to play six seasons in the NFL, and you're going to be able to earn a good living where you can take care of your family,' I would've said, 'That's good enough. I'm good. I can die a happy man,'" he says. "Now I'm here. And you're looking for more. You're chasing more."

When talking about the evolution of his self-doubt, given the continued skepticism about his ability, he brings up a book called The Dream Giver. Per the inside cover, it's about "Ordinary, a Nobody who leaves the Land of Familiar to pursue his Big Dream." Cousins spoils the book for me by telling me one of the morals, as he remembers it: You start to climb one mountain, gain confidence, make it to the peak, look around, and realize that, dammit, there are more mountains to climb. [He would never say "dammit."] Cousins does not tell me this book is about him, but if we all have stories we craft about ourselves, I think this is his.

"Okay, you've started a couple of years," says Cousins, about his NFL career as it stands. "The guys you're chasing have done it for a decade, they're throwing 4,000 yards every single year, they're staying healthy, they're gonna win double-digit games, they're gonna go to the playoffs. And that's certainly not where people are pegging me as a quarterback. But that's the next mountain to climb."

On the way back into the harbor, Cousins relays an analogy he picked up from a pastor, one that reveals the conviction underlying both his frugality—the basement living, the used cars, the patience in buying his lakefront house—and his impending contract. Being irresponsible with your money, Cousins says, is like being a FedEx deliveryman who, instead of shepherding the packages to their recipients, stores them in his basement. He wants to use his gifts to impact as many people as he can. Those blessings are financial, sure, but he believes they include everything else, too. He stewards his body with diet, training, and sleep; he shepherds his mind with books and brain training; and he guards the gifts football provides—the platform it allows him, the money it bestows—by being shrewd in these contract talks. "We're all going to have to give an account for what we did with what we were given," he says. "In this contract negotiation, if I just roll over and die, that's not being a good steward of what God has given me."

All of which helps explain why Cousins, a guy so uptight his wife describes him as "the type to go the beach and leave his shoes on," is sitting here on a boat in Lake Michigan so seemingly unbothered by the unresolved contract and the upcoming season. God has provided before. Why wouldn't He now? Cousins's ultimate confidence has always been in his faith, his sense that all things are happening exactly as they should be.

"I just need to trust [the Lord]. Worry and control is not going to get me anywhere," he says, before chuckling. "The Lord's a gambler, and he's kind of used my football journey to challenge me in that [faith] every single year. And that's why I think the Lord likes one-year contracts. Because I don't have control."

2017 FEATURE CLIPS

Back in the parking lot of Holland Water Sports, after returning the boat, we wait for Kyle to fetch the conversion van. That's when something grabs Cousins's attention. Another GMC Savana, parked right there in the lot.

"Oooh, that conversion van is outdoing ours. Dang it!" he yells. I cannot tell how much of this is facetious, and how much is real envy over a vehicle shaped like a giant Kleenex box. "They had to show us up. They got the moon roof extended."

"And it looks newer," says Julie.

"Newer. Better tires and rims," says Cousins.

"And it's clean. No dents," says Julie.

Kirk and Julie bought their van for $5,000 from his grandma in 2014, when his grandfather passed away. It has 136,000 miles on it. But it's familiar: Cousins grew up riding around in it. And it's practical for a growing family that needs a vehicle they can pile into on game days, since Cousins is only given one parking pass. After wins at home, the Cousins family can drive it to D.C.'s Union Station. There, they eat at Shake Shack to celebrate. Then, if the Redskins had the early game, they'll drive home to catch Sunday Night Football.

From the inside, the van feels, essentially, like a living room on wheels. Julie says it still smells like it did when Cousins's grandparents would take it to Iowa football games (that smell can best be described as musty, in a familiar way). But Cousins points out that the van's sound system is "strong to quite strong."

In 2015, as part of an endorsement with a D.C. area car dealership, Cousins was scheduled to get a new car. But the deal was scrapped before the season. Would you want to sponsor a backup quarterback? So he just kept driving the van. Then Cousins was named the starter, and hasn't not started a game since. He inked a new sponsorship with Virginia Tire & Auto—this one with a different provision. "Part of the deal is that they get to work on my van, keep it up to date, keep it safe, make sure it's running well," Cousins says.

And it does. Sure, the rearward captain seats—La-Z-Boys, basically—are accessible from only from one side, the new-car smell has ripened to an old-towel smell, and it handles a bit like your grandma's couch. Not the sexiest whip in the lot. But against all expectations, and with some meticulous upkeep, the damn thing just keeps working. The van is a tidy little metaphor for Cousins's carefully designed life: it might elicit some raised eyebrows, but it has gotten him everywhere he has intended to be.

"We might have to upgrade," says Julie, still enamored by the other van.

"Honestly, I've thought about it," says Cousins. "But I would feel like I'm betraying my roots."

Just then, Kyle pulls Gandalf, The Grey into the parking lot, the pavement crackling under the tires.

"You want to drive, Kirk?" Kyle asks.

"Yeah," he says. "I'm the driver."

LB MASON FOSTER

A Redskins player offered a college kid free tickets — in exchange for charity work

By Dan Steinberg, The Washington Post
September 29, 2017

Ryan Springer had seen other NFL fans ask players for tickets in exchange for that strangest of online currencies — Twitter retweets — so he figured it couldn't hurt. The idea came to him shortly before Father's Day, and Springer — whose father, James, grew up in Fairfax County — pitched it to Redskins linebacker Mason Foster as a gift to his dad, who works 80-hour weeks and doesn't get to spend a lot of time with his son.

"How many RT's for me to win Redskins tickets to surprise my dad for Father's Day?" he asked Foster.

The answer wasn't exactly what he expected: Foster told Springer to get 554 retweets — but also to do three hours of community service.

"I told him to pick his favorite charity and do three hours, and he went and did it," Foster said this week. "I knew that he was doing community service [with his fraternity], so I told him pick one and I'll give you tickets. I felt like it'd be cool. That was something that I felt like would help, to see if he would do it if he really wanted the tickets."

Springer's fraternity at Morehead State, Delta Tau Delta, had previously donated money to JDRF, which funds type 1 diabetes research. After Springer passed 554 retweets, he went to the local offices of JDRF to pack some of the group's Bags of Hope, a backpack filled with educational materials, a stuffed bear, a glucose meter and other trinkets for kids who have been diagnosed with type 1 diabetes.

"Actually, I thought it was pretty awesome that he asked me to do it," said Springer, 22, a senior marketing major whose goal is to work in pro sports. "It really opened my eyes to something I need to do more of."

After he finished, Springer wrote back to Foster, attaching the photo that demonstrated his community service, and writing that he looked forward to continuing to volunteer for the group. He also got the two tickets that he asked for, to Sunday night's prime time win over the Raiders, which he attended with his father.

As it turns out, they sat next to Troy Walter and his brother Tyler, Troy having also won two tickets from Foster on social media, although without the community service requirement. Troy was turning 17 two days after the Raiders game; all Foster required was 54 retweets to get the seats.

And all four of Foster's guests were surprised to find themselves sitting about a dozen rows above the field, just above the home team's tunnel, in a section with player family members. They were in front of Bashaud Breeland's family, near Jamison Crowder's family. They could see the team huddling in the tunnel before running out in the field.

"It was the best experience ever, the best game I've ever been to," said Walter, of Leonardtown in Southern Maryland. "It made me really respect him more as a football player and really pay attention to him as a person."

"I'll tell you what, I couldn't have picked a better game, and me and my dad had a great time," Springer said. "Definitely a moment we'll cherish for the rest of our lives."

And Springer has also followed up on his pledge to remain involved with JDRF. While he was volunteering, Springer met Allison Perkins, the development coordinator at JDRF Kentucky. She later asked Springer about contributing to the group's annual charity walk, which is this coming weekend. His fraternity got involved, and Springer said they had raised about $1,200 for the group.

Volunteering "actually opened up doors for me to be able to do that," Springer said. "I wouldn't have done the event this weekend if it wasn't for Mason Foster. I think it's pretty awesome how this worked out."

Now, the only reason I knew about any of this is because Walter's brother mentioned it in a thread about the two Redskins running backs who bought a kid an Xbox this week, with Walter pointing out that the team has "a lot of great guys." Looking at that conversation eventually led me to Foster, and then to Springer, and then to this online interaction that wound up working out pretty nicely for everyone, during a week when a lot of people have said a lot of nasty things about a lot of pro athletes.

"Really I just want to thank Mason Foster for this; I think that's what this should be all about," Springer said. "I definitely want to make sure that Mason Foster gets his recognition for doing this. I couldn't thank him enough."

S DEANGELO HALL

DeAngelo Hall may become a broadcaster or a GM. But first, one more Redskins season.

By Mike Jones, The Washington Post
July 25, 2017

DeAngelo Hall strolls into the kitchen of his new house, glancing up from his cellphone to greet three of his six kids and mother-in-law.

2017 FEATURE CLIPS

The Washington Redskins safety just returned from his morning workout at Redskins Park, and from picking up 15-year-old Tyrel from his football workout at John Champe High School.

The high-backed bar stools neatly arranged around the large marble island catch Hall's attention. They arrived while he was out.

"Think these are wrong," Hall says. He pulls one out, sits on it, scoots up to the island to test out the height. "Yep. They sent the wrong ones. Think it's the wrong wood. Maybe the design, too."

In June, Hall moved his family from Atlanta where they lived since 2004, his rookie year with the Falcons.

The unpacking and decorating remains ongoing. Furniture deliveries trickle in, pictures must be hung, and handy men tromp in and out.

Hall's hectic offseason unfolds with him at a curious intersect: He's beginning the final act of his playing career while simultaneously preparing for the next phase of life.

Coming off three straight injury-shortened seasons, Hall realizes his mortality and, for the first time in his career, he is without a clear role — even as he feels a yearning to get on the field one more time. But he also must plan for life after football.

So, the last six months have featured continued rehab from a torn anterior cruciate ligament, trips to Florida for checkups at orthopedic surgeon James Andrews' practice in Florida, relocation of his family, discussions about post-playing job opportunities, and meetings for various investment projects.

But the stools are priority No. 1 right now.

"I've gotta call these people," he says.

Lisa Blankenbeckler — visiting from Atlanta to help while her daughter attends a conference — volunteers to fix breakfast for Tyrel and siblings, Breana, 7, and twins D.J. and Jaden, 5 (and 11-year-old Maya and 10-year-old Talia once they wake up).

Hall thanks her, and pushes the stool back in. He retreats to the basement, where a series of beautiful but unhung pieces of artwork line the walls, and to his office. He unlocks the door and sits at his desk.

The office also remains unsettled. Disassembled pieces of his gun collection lay on the desk. The rest remain in shipping containers on the floor. Hall can't decide whether he wants to adorn the bare white walls with his favorite rifles or his record collection — including his two favorites, Michael Jackson's "Thriller" and "Watch the Throne" by Jay-Z and Kanye West.

Hall calls the furniture company, explaining his predicament. Eventually, he decides he'll let his wife, Jada Hall, sort things out. As soon as Hall hangs up, Breana calls down asking him to set up the spring floor in the rec room so she can practice handstands and flips.

"Sorry, man." He shakes his head. "I've got a lot going on."

Just two days earlier, Hall and Tyrel, a wide receiver, returned from the FBU Top Gun Showcase football camp in South Carolina. In between unpacking boxes, he has spent the last month as taxi driver to football and cheer practices.

The daddy duties aren't new. But in the past, Hall separated football and family. While in Atlanta, family commanded his attention. When in Virginia, football. But the timing was right for the Hall family to move north, with Tyrel entering high school and Mya middle school.

"We knew once I was done playing, the opportunities would be more plentiful up here," Hall explains.

So, here they are. The new living arrangement will require balance, Hall reminds himself.

Hall, 33, is entering his 14th NFL season and 10th with the Redskins, who he grew up cheering for as a kid in the Tidewater area. With defensive lineman Kedric Golston, a 2006 draft pick, no longer on the roster, Hall is now the longest-tenured member of the team.

During his first pro 10 seasons, Hall established himself as one of the better cornerbacks in the league, averaging 4.3 interceptions a season while earning three Pro Bowl selections. His 43 interceptions lead all active players.

After rupturing an Achilles' tendon in 2014 and returning in 2015, Hall's burst wasn't what it once was, but he and his coaches still believed he could remain productive with a move to safety. Hall believed the position switch would help him extend his career, just as it did for former Packers and Raiders star Charles Woodson. But back-to-back injury-plagued seasons have prevented Hall from showing his capabilities at safety.

As a result, Hall wondered this offseason if his time in Washington would end.

"Are they going to give me an opportunity?" Hall said of the questions he asked himself. "Am I going to be on the street hurt, trying to find a job? Nobody wants, after playing in this league for 14 years, to be on the street looking for a job while you're hurt."

Hall, who hasn't recorded an interception since 2013 — something that frustrates him greatly — considered retirement.

He had options. He enjoyed dabbling in analyst work for various media outlets during the offseason, and he figured that if he worked at it full time, he could cobble together enough media gigs to earn roughly $1 million.

Hall has always aspired to one day shape the Redskins as a talent evaluator. Washington's general manager vacancy and San Francisco's hiring of former player and broadcaster John Lynch as GM despite a lack of prior experience intensified Hall's interest. He spoke with team president Bruce Allen, who has jokingly called Hall his "assistant general manager," about a potential front office role, but couldn't decide whether he should keep playing.

A conversation with Woodson, who retired after the 2015 season, settled things for Hall.

"He told me, 'When your body can't play anymore and you can't keep up with these young dudes anymore, you're going to know. And you're going to wish you had one more play, one more year, one more opportunity to put that helmet on. ... So, enjoy playing 'til you can't play. That other stuff will be there when you're 60. You definitely can't play when you're 60.'"

Hall put off thoughts of retirement. Redskins officials assured him that they still saw him as an asset in 2017.

"He's kind of been a mainstay here and he kind of keeps the boat from sinking from time to time," Coach Jay Gruden said last month. "There's some volatile people in that defensive back room from time to time and he's a calming guy, if you can believe that. ... Hopefully we'll be able to get him back at a later date, but if we don't have him back when we want to, at least he'll be in the room and still have a major influence on the team and the defense."

Because of his injuries (torn Achilles' tendon in 2014, toe and groin injuries in 2015, torn anterior cruciate ligament last season), the Redskins asked Hall to take to a pay cut entering this final year of his contract. Hall agreed to a reduction from $4.25 million to $1.95 million.

"It ain't about the money, ain't about getting rich," Hall says. "I did that already. I just love this game. ... I feel like I'm so close to a lot of goals. ... Seeing plays that I know I could've made and not being able to help my teammates win, it's really frustrating. But it's really what brings me back."

Gruden's description of Hall as "a calming guy" evoked a chuckle both from coach and player.

For much of his career, Hall was considered anything but that. Brash and emotional coming out of Virginia Tech, Hall would fight anyone that crossed him — teammate, opponent, authority figure.

In 2007, while playing for Atlanta, after multiple penalties in one game, Hall had a meltdown on the sideline and an animated argument with coach Bobby Petrino. In 2012 while playing for the Redskins at Pittsburgh, Hall had to be separated from a referee after cursing him out and got ejected. After frustrating losses, Hall would question coaching strategies during postgame news conferences. The antics fueled critics, who, in describing Hall as a selfish player, gave him the nickname "Me-Angelo."

But eventually, Hall morphed from volatile to sage.

Hall credits time spent with former teammates and locker room leaders London Fletcher, Lorenzo Alexander and Golston for some of his maturation. The negative events helped as well.

"As low as I felt during those moments, I wouldn't change a thing because it's grown me as a player and person," Hall explains. "It's matured me. To hear Jay call me the voice of reason — if you had asked anyone around me if I was that five years ago, they would look at me like I was crazy. No way I'd have a chance to be talking about one day joining the front office."

Dwindling opportunities to win a Super Bowl also helped change Hall's perspective. As a younger player, he put more stock in individual accolades — “Getting to the Pro Bowl was considered the upper echelon when I was coming up,” he says — and focused less on sacrificing for the team. When Hall turned 30, he realized he had three Pro Bowl selections but only three playoff appearances (one victory). Now Hall preaches “team first.”

“He’ll be hurt and still coming to meetings,” cornerback Bashaud Breeland said. “He’s always sharing his perspective and helping us understand. It takes a lot off you when you know you have someone with experience like D-Hall that you can rely on. ... It makes you wanna help him win a ring.”

As a top-10 draft pick with Atlanta, and high-priced acquisition with Oakland and Washington, Hall has always held leading roles for his team. But this year it’s different. The Redskins plan to start 2016 second-round pick Su’a Cravens and free agent signing D.J. Swearingen at safety.

“You’re an old dog. It’s very similar to an undrafted guy or a low-round draft pick guy who’s got a lot of guys in front of him. Show some stuff and move up,” Hall said. “I don’t want any handouts or favors. I want to get mine. I’m hyped. But I still don’t know how everything’s going to work out.”

Redskins training camp starts Thursday, and Hall will open on the physically unable to perform list. He can run, make cuts and jump without pain. But doctors and trainers want his quadriceps attached to the surgically repaired knee to strengthen a bit more.

Once he gets the go-ahead, Hall hopes to be a contributor and to savor every healthy moment.

“As a 23, 25, 27-year-old, you just figure, ‘Okay, I’ll do this another seven, eight years.’ But you didn’t really appreciate it,” Hall recalls. “Now you appreciate being in the training room getting stretched out. You appreciate that time in the weight room, being in the room watching film. You appreciate just playing. And that’s because you know you’re almost done playing. ... I hate that I don’t have five more years to see it through with these guys.”

CB JOSHUA HOLSEY

After two ACL tears, Joshua Holsey gave football one last shot. Now he’s in the NFL with the Redskins.

By Mike Jones, The Washington Post

After tearing the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee for a second time back in 2015, Auburn cornerback Joshua Holsey decided he should give up.

He had already come back from the injury that robbed him of the bulk of his sophomore season and had a solid junior season, but then to have it happen again four plays into the second game of his senior season? That was a serious blow, and Holsey started thinking about the long-term picture.

“A lot of people don’t know this, but I had told myself I wasn’t going to play football anymore when I tore it the second time,” said Holsey, whom the Redskins drafted in the seventh round. “I wanted to be able to run around with my kids when I was older. I was looking to the future, not the present.”

Holsey did wind up deciding to give football one more crack thanks to the encouragement he received from his then position coach Travaris Robinson.

“Coach told me if you feel like you have anything left in the tank, he felt like I should give it another shot,” Holsey recalled. “He said, ‘Once you walk away from the game, it’s going to be one of the hardest things you’ll ever do.’ So, he told me if I felt like I had anything left in the tank ... That’s what I did and now I’m here. It’s just a blessing for me.”

Reflecting on his road back, Holsey said, “Once I told myself I was going to come back; that I was going to play, I was in rehab three times a day, I didn’t go on no spring break. I didn’t have any partying. It was focusing on rehab and getting my leg back stronger and when the season rolled around, I was ready to go.”

Holsey had a solid medical redshirt senior season, recording 30 tackles, three interceptions and 10 pass breakups. He proved himself as a tenacious competitor and turned heads with a strong game against Clemson’s Mike Williams.

Holsey didn’t receive an invitation to the NFL Scouting Combine, but did well at his pro day, and the Redskins felt like he was worth a seventh-round pick and believe he could very well outplay his draft billing.

“What I went through, a lot of people don’t think you can make it out of that situation with two ACLs. I’m just a walking testimony for anybody,” said Holsey, who said one of the big reasons why he decided to give football another try was his active status in his community and his desire to inspire those children. “No matter what you go through, if you keep fighting, you can get whatever your dream is. With two ACLs, a lot of people counted me out. Even coming back, they thought I didn’t have a chance, thought I was too slow. But my film kind of showed that wasn’t true. I can play with the best of them and I’m going to continue doing that.”

At last week’s rookie minicamp, Holsey was among a handful of players that stood out in particular to coach Jay Gruden.

On the first day of practice, after seeing Holsey compete in one-on-one drills, the coach started devoting extra attention to the 5-foot-10, 190-pound defensive back.

“He was down here with me on 1-on-1’s,” Holsey said. “And told me yesterday I had a good day of 1-on-1’s and he was like, ‘I want you to go in here with these dogs [Saturday],’ and I said, ‘Coach, I’m not worried about that.’ So, he was down there with the 1-one-1’s and then we got to that team period and I seen [the pass], broke on it and he came to me and said, ‘You should’ve picked it.’ He’s a good dude. I enjoy being around him. It’s all fun and games right now.”

Before busting on Holsey for not intercepting the ball, Gruden did rush up to the cornerback and smack him on the helmet, commending him for the good play.

Asked about Holsey’s play during camp, Gruden said, “Watching him move around, it doesn’t look like he was hurt at all. He’s really quick in and out of breaks. He’s a competitor, you can see that. He likes to talk a little bit, as do I, so it’s a good match. We have a lot of fun with him. I think he’s going to be a good candidate for this football team. I know he ran around well in special teams drills, so we’ll see how it goes, but I was impressed with Holsey.”

Holsey spent most of rookie minicamp at the cornerback position, but once he mixes in with the veterans, he likely will work primarily at nickelback, where Washington still is trying to find consistent options.

Holsey said he can’t wait to share the field and locker room with his veteran teammates, like Josh Norman and Bashaud Breeland.

“I’m gonna be in their back pocket,” he said. “Wherever they go, I go. Whatever they eat, I eat. Whenever they sleep, I sleep. I gotta do what they do to see. They’re in the league for a long time, so I’ve got to see what they do to stay in the league that long, so I’m gonna mess with them a lot.”

DL ZIGGY HOOD

Redskins DE Ziggy Hood finds inspiration through son’s journey

By John Keim, ESPN.com
September 11, 2016

ASHBURN, Va. -- Emotion overwhelmed Washington Redskins defensive lineman Ziggy Hood as he thought about his son’s smile. It’s not just a simple gesture for his son; it represents a moment others might take for granted. Hood dabbed at his eyes and lowered his head, ignoring teammates walking past him after a training camp practice in Richmond.

He paused for 10 seconds. And then 10 more.

“My goodness,” Hood said, shaking his head.

Another 10 seconds. More dabbing at his eyes.

Forty-eight seconds passed before Hood could resume. You see, that smile means the world to Hood because his oldest son, Josiah, now 6, has autism, and he and his wife, Sara, had been told plenty of things their son would never do. So that smile -- just thinking about it -- represents the journey the Hoods have traveled. Dealing with career issues is one thing, but the Hoods have had much more to handle.

2017 FEATURE CLIPS

Here Hood is, starting for the Redskins at defensive end Monday night against the Pittsburgh Steelers, the same organization that drafted him in the first round seven years ago. Hood always has been known as a hard worker, but his oldest son provided a bump of inspiration in Hood's quest for a long career.

"It not only helped me become a better person, but it fed me to keep pushing," Hood said.

The Hoods have another son, James, who is one year younger than Josiah. Hood's wife and his mother typically take care of the kids during the season. Last season, after being cut by Jacksonville following an injured plantar fasciitis, Hood realized even more the daily challenges Josiah faced. Hood's daily presence at home with his sons while he waited to join another team created an inspirational experience.

"As Josiah pushed, Ziggy pushed harder," Sara said. "Our son never complains or fusses; he's the most incredible son you've ever met in your life. Every time Ziggy felt like it was getting too hard, he would stop and say, 'Baby Jo doesn't complain, I don't complain. If he's not fussing, I need to get through this.' Then our son James does something incredible and it's a huge milestone. Not that football doesn't matter anymore, but it's so much greater than that. The boys are his everything."

Hood wrote about Josiah and their experiences for the Players' Tribune last year. Hood admitted to having difficulties with the situation from the time his son was diagnosed.

"When you're 22 or 23 and you have your first kid, you have all these dreams and expectations," Hood said during training camp. "And then, boom, you get hit with this curveball. I wasn't prepared for it. I didn't know how to deal with stuff like that, and it took me some time. When I'd go to work, I'm thinking, 'Damn, what did I do wrong for this to happen? Was this God's intent for this to happen to me?' A lot of questions, a lot of whys."

Hood said it took him two or three years to accept the diagnosis. "When I finally accepted it, I was like, 'What do I have to do to make sure everyone's comfortable,'" he said. "That's when I started getting involved and becoming more familiar with it, and instead of letting it hold me back I was able to push through it and let it be the fuel for what I need to do to make it work."

There have been victories throughout Josiah's life. The Hoods were told Josiah would never walk -- but he did, by age 2 and a half. The Hoods use cards with pictures on them so Josiah can let them know what he wants. Sara said one therapist told them this would never work with Josiah. Within three months it was working.

"Every time they say he can't do something, he masters it," Sara said. "I know these are small things for most people ... But he's amazing."

Sticking in the NFL

Hood's sons could be considered a big reason he's still pushing to stick around in the NFL. Hood became a solid player for Pittsburgh, though in the Steelers' 3-4 defense the linemen's job is to protect the linebackers so they can make plays. He did well enough that Jacksonville signed him to a four-year, $16 million deal in 2014. A year later, after Hood suffered plantar fasciitis, the Jaguars released him. Chicago signed him in October, only to release him two months later. Hood was an under-the-radar signing by Washington on Feb. 2, receiving a one-year deal that some with the Redskins say might have been one of their best in the offseason.

It helps that Hood never lost his work ethic. Hood, whose given first name is Evander, grew up in Amarillo, Texas. Later, at the University of Missouri, he gave up date nights with his now wife because he had to work out. That drive hasn't changed.

"He's an interesting guy," said Chip Smith, who trains NFL players in the offseason in Atlanta. "I've put over 1,600 guys in the NFL and have 250 clients on rosters. I've been doing this a long time, and he is by far the hardest-working player I've ever trained. His [workouts] were six hours. Most vets don't put in that kind of time. This year I saw some serious enthusiasm. He was very excited and had a renewed vigor."

Hood also worked on altering the way he attacked linemen after working with trainer Jay Caldwell for three years. After an ODTA session this spring, Caldwell phoned Hood's agent, Andy Ross, to let him know it was finally clicking for his client.

"I've never seen him this dedicated or focused," Caldwell said.

Discovering motivation

A lot of that goes back to the journey with his family.

The Hoods see that Josiah shares a lot of the same qualities as his father, which has helped him reach milestones.

"He looks just like me but acts like Zig," Sara said. "Just as calm as can be, quiet as can be. Sometimes you forget Zig is in the room; if he wasn't so huge you wouldn't know he was there. That's how Josiah is. Never gets mad. Chill as can be, but works incredibly hard and does not complain."

When Hood was a free agent in 2014, he told Ross to research medical care in each city that showed interest; they were leaving Pittsburgh, where they had received good care for their son. In Jacksonville, they had 17 different doctors and six different therapists.

"It was more important than his contract," Ross said of the medical care. "That says a lot about him. He was prepared with all that information before he got to free agency."

While Hood found a home with Washington, there are still struggles. Hood doesn't open up much about his son's journey, though he and his wife aren't hiding from it, either. She didn't help him with the Tribune essay but said she cried after reading his words. They want others to know that they're human, too. Playing football makes you popular; it doesn't make you immune from life's issues.

"It's important for people to see us who we really are off the field," Sara said.

Not that everything is now easy. The struggles to accept also remain, though it's a battle that has decreased over time.

"I still pray that I wake up in the morning and he's standing there waving at me and everything's normal," Hood said. "But I love him."

When Hood comes home, that smile is waiting for him. Sara said Josiah is so happy, "he loses it" when he sees his father. They've all traveled a long way together, and for Hood, victories are seen all the time. He's back on the field as a starter. His son has taken steps that are just as monumental in their own way.

Perhaps one of the biggest? The Hoods were told that Josiah would never talk, but now he can repeat words that he hears. While in the car about two years ago, his wife heard him say something for the first time. That word? Da-da.

RB ROB KELLEY

Redskins rookie's 'Fat Rob' nickname isn't all about weight

By Scott Allen, The Washington Post
August 26, 2016

Redskins running back Robert Kelley was a guest on ESPN 980's "Inside the Locker Room" on Tuesday and, not surprisingly, the first question for the undrafted rookie out of Tulane was about the nickname that Redskins Coach Jay Gruden revealed to the world last week.

"Rob did a good job," Gruden said of Kelley's preseason debut against the Falcons. "'Fat Rob,' that's what is on his backpack. He did a nice job. ... That's his nickname in college if you didn't know that -- 'Fat Rob' Kelley. But anyway, he was impressive. He's been impressive since we got him."

Kelley's simple explanation for how he got the nickname is about what you might expect.

"My senior year, my running backs coach brought me a backpack with 'Fat Rob' [inscribed on it], a nickname I actually earned in the offseason eating a lot of food," Kelley said this week. "I don't like to talk about it."

The man responsible for giving Kelley the nickname -- and the customized backpack -- was happy to talk about it, and offered a slightly different take on the moniker's origin.

"That's what I would call him, 'Fat Rob,'" former Tulane running backs coach David Johnson, who left New Orleans to join new Memphis Coach Mike Norvell's staff in December, said Friday. "It had nothing to do with his weight, it was really about his heart. I would call him 'Fat Rob' all the time because his heart was so big."

Okay, but the 20-plus pounds Kelley put on during his senior season weren't all concentrated in his aorta, right?

"He did gain a little bit of weight his senior year because he wasn't practicing during the spring, but he had a really big heart and sometimes he was loyal to a fault," Johnson said. "For me it was more about his heart and his character. It kind of came a little true when he gained that weight."

Kelley starred at O. Perry Walker High in New Orleans and was Tulane's leading rusher as a sophomore in 2012. He was declared academically ineligible to participate in the spring 2014 and sat out the entire 2014 season. Kelley eventually earned his degree and returned to the team as a fifth-year senior last season, when he rushed for 232 yards on 65 carries. After the final game of his college career, Kelley said he weighed 249 pounds. By Tulane's Pro Day in March, he was down to 225 pounds and called Johnson to let him know that he performed well in front of scouts.

"He said, 'Coach, coach, I ran a good time and I kept running the ball hard,'" Johnson recalled. "He was so proud of himself and I was proud of him. It was really tough for him. Eighty or 90 percent of people would've quit if they were in his position. He didn't have a stellar senior year, but even though he was the third-string running back on the depth chart, he was always the leader of that room."

Kelley went undrafted, but signed with the Redskins as a free agent in April and rushed for 40 yards and a touchdown in his pre-season debut. With Matt Jones and Chris Thompson out for Friday's game against the Bills, Kelley — listed at 228 pounds — is expected to split carries with seventh-round pick Keith Marshall. Johnson, who texts and talks with Kelley often, isn't surprised his former pupil is making a serious push to be the Redskins' third running back.

"I know what type of kid he is, I know his athletic ability," Johnson said. "He's one of the most athletic people I know and I knew he would make the most of his opportunity. He came from a pro-style offense, but the biggest advantage he has is he knows protection. That's one of the things that we kind of stressed. A lot of guys can run and catch, but can you block and can you protect that million dollar quarterback?"

Johnson said he'll cry if "Fat Rob" is on the Redskins' sideline come Week 1 and could only laugh when Kelley contacted him recently to let him know that Gruden had outed his nickname.

"I told him, hey, you need a marker there," Johnson said. "Everyone has a brand."

Hurricane Katrina just one major hurdle for Redskins RB Rob Kelley

By John Keim, ESPN.com
December 8, 2016

ASHBURN, Va. -- He was just a kid when Hurricane Katrina devastated his city, starting Rob Kelley's life on a nomadic journey. It destroyed his parents' homes; it helped him grow and taught him how to overcome -- a trait he continues to use. He was a poor kid left with nothing except perspective and an opportunity.

Katrina altered the lives of many in New Orleans, including the Washington Redskins rookie running back. Thing is, for Kelley it was just another obstacle -- just like being from the Upper Ninth Ward's Desire area -- and just like being suspended for a time at Tulane. It shaped his life and led him to where he is now, but it didn't deter him. Several teammates from back in the day are dead; a few, like Kelley, made it to the NFL.

"His toughness, being from a tough environment, helped him to deal with anything anyone brought to him," said Skip LaMothe, who coached Kelley for two seasons at O. Perry Walker in New Orleans. "That was one of the things that probably kept him from going in the wrong direction -- and he had a passion for football. He had a major passion."

The Redskins are benefitting from that passion: Kelley, a tough runner, has rushed for 421 yards in five starts -- and gained 524 overall. Maybe few saw this coming, but others who have known Kelley a long time did. It goes back to Katrina.

Devastation

Kelley's parents both lived in the Upper Ninth ward -- he said his father owned a house while his mom rented one. At the time,

Kelley was a seventh-grader practicing with the varsity at the Desire Street Academy, a school run by former Redskins quarterback Danny Wuerffel. Before the flood, coaches gathered the players and told them to anticipate a brief shutdown. Kelley's family evacuated before the storm.

"No one imagined it would turn out like it did," said Brett Bonnafons, then a football assistant at Desire.

Kelley's family, like everyone else in his area, was displaced. He went to live in Dallas with his mother and two of his sisters. Two other sisters traveled to Houston with his dad. They left a life behind.

"We lost so much stuff, our houses, our memories," Kelley said. "I don't have any baby photos."

Thus began the nomadic tale: They lived in Baton Rouge for a couple weeks, staying with an aunt, before his mom found a house in Texas and sent for her kids. Thanks in part to Wuerffel's connections, the school re-opened in October at a 4-H camp in Niceville, Florida. There were 10 cabins, a pavilion and shelter that served as classrooms and a building turned into a school. Of the original 150 boys, Bonnafons said school officials gathered approximately 90, finding them in several states -- Tennessee, Texas, Oklahoma -- and drove them to Florida.

"At that age, I wasn't worried about a house and stuff like that," Kelley said. "I always saw momma crying but I never understood what was going on. I should have, but I was worried about my friends. I was like, 'I'll never see my friends; I have to make new friends.' But my momma cried all the time about it."

In Florida, Kelley roomed with nine other boys in a cabin with a ceiling fan but no central air. Kelley was just a kid with other boys his age trying to enjoy life.

"It was hard on my parents. We lost everything and now their son is away in Florida," Kelley said. "It was the first time I got a cell phone and they called me all the time. But I was just out there having fun, running around, playing football and going to school. ... When you get older, you see how it stressed out your parents and you're like, 'Now I understand what they were going through.'"

But one of his good friends from childhood, Jarred Micken, who was with him in Florida and is currently a high school assistant coach, said, "It's kind of hard not seeing your parents all the time. We had the choice to leave on weekends if you wanted to, but it was still hard and being somewhere you're not from."

"But a lot of people supported us and took care of us while our parents were wherever they were at. That helped us a whole lot. And football helped us, too. That kept us out of those negative things and that molded Rob into the man you all are seeing."

Indeed, it forced Kelley and the others to mature in a hurry.

"I had to have people wire me money and the older guys were like, 'Give me some money.' They were hurting, too," Kelley said. "Everybody was out for themselves and you had to watch yourself. People were stealing. It was a group of guys who lost everything out there and were trying to play football and chase their dream and ain't really got nothing."

Growing up fast

There were five-hour bus rides -- one way -- to every game as they continued to play in Louisiana. When Kelley visited his family in Texas, he traveled alone on a bus for 12 hours.

Kelley encountered situations that kids his age typically didn't.

"One time they lost my luggage and I didn't know how to handle it," Kelley said. "My mom was like, 'You've got to go fill out this form.' We had to talk about this stuff over the phone. I'm like, 'This is the stuff you should be doing.'"

"In my eyes, it's like I've been on my own a long time. I had parents, but in reality I was always on my own because growing up, I'd be at my mom's or dad's or grandma's house. When Katrina happened, I left home for three years. It mentally prepared me. I had to learn to look after myself."

When Kelley was a seventh-grader, Bonnafons mistook him for a scrawny ninth or 10th grader and figured he was just practice fodder. A year later, Kelley had developed into a tough eighth-grader, pushed in part by the previous year's events.

By this time, the academy had relocated to Baton Rouge, but remained a boarding school. He became a backup to the starting varsity back. He improved in the classroom.

"I don't know if it was because of his upbringing or because of the stuff he went through during Katrina,” Bonnafons said. “It was rough, not because there were all these problems and fights, but because kids were emotionally burned out. I don’t know if that hardened him or not. But when he came back as an eighth-grader, he was running and working out and reading and doing everything he had with a purpose.

“People were scared to tackle him, even as an eighth-grader, because he’s so physical. Even at 180 pounds, we had a 225-pound linebacker he was going to try to run over. He failed more times than not because that linebacker was very good, but he never quit.”

Inspiration

It’s a mindset he’s carried with him ever since: at O. Perry Walker, a school on the west bank of New Orleans where he transferred for his last two years; at Tulane, where he was suspended because of academics and then after he was charged with simple battery and simple robbery. Charges were later dropped, but he ended up missing an entire season, sitting in the stands in tears before games when teammates would visit.

When Kelley returned for his final college season last year, he had lost his standing on the depth chart. Kelley stuck around, propped up by the belief of coaches and relying on his toughness. There were doubts about his ability to learn. He was told to cut his long hair. His response: Get to know me; don’t judge me by the locks.

“Nothing made me more proud,” Bonnafons said, “than when he called to say he was graduating from Tulane because of what he had to fight through to get to that.”

The football success stories out of Desire include other NFL players DeAngelo Peterson, who once spent time on the Redskins’ practice squad in 2012; and Lavar Edwards, now a linebacker with Indianapolis. Micken said for Kelley, playing in the NFL “is overwhelming for him now. I don’t think it’s hit him yet.” Several players signed at Division I schools. And there are sad stories -- Bonnafons said he attended four funerals from boys at the school. Kelley said of former teammates, “a lot of them are dead.”

“A whole bunch of teammates died off that [O. Perry] team, too,” he said. “I kind of feel chosen. I had so many moments could be like, ‘F--- it.’ I could have graduated and said, ‘F--- it, I’m not playing football anymore.’ [But] I honestly think all that stuff was meant to happen and made me a way better person.

“People text me all the time like, ‘man you are an inspiration.’ I don’t feel that. But people noticed.”

Yes, they did.

“Rob is one of those ones the light went on for,” Bonnafons said. “The thing I loved about Rob, even at Tulane, is that he knew, ‘I’m not going to let anything else affect what I do’ especially where he came from, bad things happened. It was a good place to learn how to be a man.”

@dcspportsbog: Two Redskins players bought a kid an Xbox at GameStop, and it was good

By Scott Allen, The Washington Post
September 28, 2017

Saundra Watts was getting her makeup done in the Dulles 28 Centre in Sterling on Tuesday, killing time while her dog was groomed at Petco, when her 10-year-old grandson, Jaden, came running into the store.

“He’s jumping up and down, saying, ‘Nana! Nana! Nana! These two guys want to buy me an Xbox. You’ve got to come right now,’” Watts recalled in a phone interview on Thursday.

Watts exchanged a skeptical look with the woman applying her makeup.

“She did not believe me,” said Jaden, who had wandered into a GameStop next door. “She thought it was some person who was joking with me or something.”

Actually, Saundra, an advocate for abused and neglected children, was thinking much worse.

“The first thing I’m thinking is there’s some pedophile trying to buy my grandson an Xbox,” she said. “So I’m like, I’m going to bust up in there and bust his bubble.”

When they entered GameStop, Jaden introduced Saundra to the two men in shorts and T-shirts who had made the generous offer: Washington Redskins running backs Keith Marshall and Rob Kelley.

“Is it okay if we buy your son an Xbox?” Marshall asked Saundra, who was flattered Marshall thought she was Jaden’s mom. “I was like, ‘Really?’ Now mind you, I didn’t know they were Redskins, and neither did Jaden.”

Jaden said Marshall and Kelley had complimented him on his Colin Kaepernick 49ers jersey when he walked into the video game store to inquire about the price of the Xbox One. Kelley said Marshall overheard Jaden mention something about saving up to buy the video game console and Marshall asked his teammate if he was interested in pitching in to buy it for him.

“I was cool with it,” Kelley said. “I wish someone would’ve done something like that for me when I was growing up. His family is probably able to do whatever they want, but everybody is not able to have the stuff that we have the luxury of having. ... To make an impact on somebody, I have no problem with it.”

Saundra said she was shocked when Marshall told her he and Kelley played for the Redskins. While Kelley took a phone call, she and Jaden chatted with Marshall, who is on injured reserve for the second consecutive season after tearing his patella tendon during training camp, about his rehab and growing up in North Carolina. Jaden told Marshall he was a Cowboys fan, just like his dad, and a 49ers fan because of Kaepernick, who was released in March and remains out of a job.

Joey Snapp, a Winchester man who witnessed Marshall and Kelley’s random act of kindness, posted about it on Facebook. Snapp tweeted his appreciation at Marshall and Kelley, neither of whom mentioned their generous act on social media.

“The family wanted a picture that they could have, so they took one, but we didn’t post anything,” said Kelley, who was at GameStop in search of “Midnight Club II,” which was released in 2003. “Stuff like that is done from the heart. That was something that we just did and it ain’t gotta be broadcasted. ... Doing that, it felt so good just knowing that I didn’t have no ties to that kid, I didn’t have to do that. It felt good.”

C SPENCER LONG

Redskins’ center takes Long view on football, medical school

By Paul Woody, Richmond Times-Dispatch
August 3, 2017

Spencer Long graduated from the University of Nebraska with a 3.79 grade-point average and a degree in biological sciences.

He passed the MCATs and was accepted to medical school.

His father is a doctor. Both grandfathers were doctors. His mother is a chemist. His twin brother, Jake, also a Nebraska graduate, is studying to be a doctor.

And that leads to the overwhelming question: What is Spencer Long doing in uniform for the Washington Redskins, risking broken bones, torn ligaments, concussions and long-term cognitive problems, in order to be the team’s starting center?

“I love the game, and you’ve got to do it while you can, while you’re young,” said Long. “I had goals I wanted to accomplish in this game. I don’t want to stop.”

That's the first question. The second question is how does a football player in a nationally renowned program such as Nebraska have the time to study something as demanding as biology?

Check out the majors of some players at some of the most academically notable universities, and you'll find a plethora of far less demanding courses of study.

Not that there's anything wrong with that.

The thing is, athletes often are directed into subject areas that won't conflict with practice and training.

Biology, with its mandatory labs, is one of those majors with conflicts.

That the Long brothers — Jake was a tight end at Nebraska — earned biology degrees is a credit to them and the Nebraska football program.

"Our staff at Nebraska was pretty good at making sure academics came first," said Long. "You had to have them in line in order to get on field to play.

"That was one thing. The other was taking all labs and hard classes when I was young, before I had a huge team impact. I took all my stuff that was most time consuming in my freshman and sophomore years before I really became a starter.

"I don't know if we even planned that. It just kind of happened. It worked out really well. By the time I got developed and started starting in my third year, I had gotten most of my night labs and hard classes out of the way, like organic chemistry."

Organic chemistry often is the line of demarcation for future medical students. Apparently, it's headache-inducingly difficult and can turn potential medical school students to other disciplines.

"Physics was the hardest subject for me," said Long. "Organic chemistry was something I could do a little better. It wasn't that easy. I'm not saying that. But it wasn't something I particularly struggled with. Physics was. I'm kind of a pictorial learner and drawing organic chemistry problems. . . . I think, I was a little better at that than trying to figure out buoyancy or something like that."

Long, 6-foot-5, 318 pounds, wasn't feeling too buoyant Tuesday afternoon. He got sick and left the afternoon practice early.

Physics are in his past, and now Long has to figure out opposing defenses.

He has to get to the line, look quickly at what's in front of him and make a decision on any changes that must be made in the blocking schemes. It sounds simple, but it requires years of preparation, followed by hours of study.

Long takes work home with him several nights a week during the season. It's either that or stammer in meetings when offensive line coach Bill Callahan calls out defensive formations and Long must reply with the necessary adjustments almost instantaneously.

Coaches don't like stammering when immediate decisions must be made and communicated to the four other offensive linemen.

It's also a time when a 3.79 GPA in biology is of little help.

"Football is different than school," said Long. "It's X's and O's. It's like chess. It took me a long time to become football smart, and that just came with study and experience. It's not like somebody who's a genius in classroom is going to walk in and go 'OK, I have a football mind now.' It just doesn't work that way. It's a totally different concept."

Meanwhile, medical school has gone from a certainty to a concept.

Long, 26, has found a lucrative work situation — he'll make almost $1.8 million this year on top of the $2.1 million he's made for his three previous seasons.

"Possibly," Long said of attending medical school. "It's always been a dream of mine since I was a kid. It depends on how long I play.

"If I end up playing for double digit years or something like that, I'll reassess it. Med school is a big commitment."

Either way, the smart money is on Long to make the right call, on and off the field.

T MORGAN MOSES

After a rocky road to NFL stardom, Richmond's Morgan Moses seeks to motivate students

By Michael Phillips, Richmond Times-Dispatch
August 1, 2017

Morgan Moses was the talk of the high school football world in 2009. He had dozens of scholarship offers from top schools, and was considered to have NFL potential.

In the end, he couldn't accept any of those offers. His grade-point average at Meadowbrook High School in Chesterfield County was 1.6, too low to be admitted to college, even as a football star.

Moses spent a year working on his grades at Fork Union Military Academy, and was ultimately accepted into the University of Virginia, where he graduated and was drafted by the Washington Redskins in 2014.

Now he's making a point of giving back, and wants to inspire students in the process.

His Morgan Moses Foundation, with help from Washington investor Todd Hitt, is donating up to $150,000 worth of tutoring services to area students. Moses, Hitt and Richmond Mayor Levar Stoney addressed some of those students on Tuesday, encouraging them to stick with their studies.

"It's definitely cool to see how they can relate to some of the things I've been through," Moses said. "They're like, 'Wow, that's a guy that's not too far in age from me.' It's different coming from a guy like me, rather than a mom or a dad or somebody you see every day."

Moses described his time at Fork Union as a life-changing experience that set him on the path to academic success. Now, he's as comfortable in a boardroom as he is on a football field.

"When I first came in here, I didn't know anything about Morgan at first, and I thought he was like an eight- or nine-year NFL veteran," Redskins star Brandon Scherff said.

It's that savvy that helped Moses connect with Hitt, a former U.Va. soccer athlete who launched his business after taking advantage of the academic opportunities that came from playing athletics.

The two first met at the Capital Grille in D.C. to talk about Moses' foundation, and they bonded immediately — in a restaurant of snappy dressers, both men were wearing sport coats and tennis shoes.

Hitt's investment firm, Kiddar Capital, is putting up $100,000 of the funding for the tutoring, which will be available to Richmond and Chesterfield high school students through Tutor.com. Interested students can apply on the Morgan Moses Foundation website.

The Redskins are also making an investment into Richmond schools, and are paying for a full-time guidance counselor at each of the city's five high schools.

Moses said he's honored to be able to help, and cited Stoney's influence as being crucial for the city — the mayor spoke of how his own experiences with athletics helped him become the person he is today.

"He's turning the city around," Moses said. "Anytime you've got somebody like that who's doing big things — he's been through the ups and downs — it's a great thing both for my foundation and everybody in the Richmond area."

Moses serves as the unofficial host in Richmond during training camp, as the only local player on the roster. The tutoring ceremony was held on the field after Tuesday's practice, and Moses said he's hopeful that out-of-state players and fans will see what's going on in Richmond.

"There's a lot of history around here, and people don't really realize that," he said. "So being able to pull that history out and give back to the community, it's a great feeling. This is a beautiful place, and it gets overlooked all the things that are going on in the city."

Moses signed a five-year contract this past offseason with the team, with $17.5 million guaranteed.

Redskins offensive lineman Trent Williams, who was on the team when Moses arrived in 2014, said Moses has always had a desire to give back.

2017 FEATURE CLIPS

"He's starting to reap the benefits of his hard work, and I think the new contract is proof of that," Williams said. "But most important is that during his off time, he gives back all the time. He's into the neighborhood and the city. I'm proud of him for that."

Moses encouraged the assembled students to take advantage of the tutoring help in subjects they need extra assistance in.

He said he had a second chance to get his grades in order because of his football ability, but added that not everybody gets that opportunity.

Moses cited the statistic that only 21 percent of Richmond high school students are prepared for college when they graduate high school. He said he hopes his personal story, plus the tutoring funding, will help close that gap.

"Sometimes we take things for granted until they're taken away," he told the football players. "And sometimes when it's taken away, it's too late."

T TY NSEKHE

Ty Nsekhe's road to Redskins starter wound through lower leagues and odd roles

By Mike Jones, The Washington Post
November 9, 2016

Ty Nsekhe plopped down on the seat in front of his locker, his back turned to the rest of the room, and began peeling off his sweaty socks, completely unaware of the swarm of reporters that had just materialized.

At 6 feet 8 and 335 pounds, Nsekhe is impossible to miss. But any other day, the 31-year-old backup swing tackle, officially listed as a second-year pro, is an afterthought. However, with Pro Bowl left tackle Trent Williams suspended for the next four weeks for violating the league's substance-abuse policy, Nsekhe suddenly had entered the spotlight.

Feeling eyes on him, Nsekhe stole a glance over his shoulder and almost jumped upon seeing his new friends. One reporter had such limited familiarity with Nsekhe that he had to ask how to pronounce his last name. [It's en-SEK-he].

"Big Ty" swirled around on his stool and began answering questions with ease. After a trying road, Nsekhe sees himself as well prepared to handle whatever comes his way while stepping in for Williams.

"I always knew I was destined to be here," Nsekhe said. "I've had a lot of peaks and valleys. It took me five, six years to get where I am now. I kept my faith in God and kept grinding and just won't stop."

Until catching on with the Washington Redskins last season, Nsekhe spent five years bouncing around the NFL, the Canadian Football League and the Arena Football League.

Undrafted out of Texas State in 2009, Nsekhe got his first pro opportunity in the Arena Development League. There, players played for roughly $100 per game and, if they won, would earn $50 bonuses.

"So after taxes it was $100," Nsekhe laughed.

Nsekhe got a tryout with the Miami Dolphins in 2011, and the team planned to sign him, he said. But then came the NFL lockout, which killed those plans.

In 2012, after stops with the AFL's Dallas Vigilantes and Philadelphia Soul, Nsekhe started to wonder whether he should give up on football. He had started his own private-security business when the San Antonio Talons extended an offer, prompting him to give football one more shot.

Nsekhe played tackle for the Talons, but he went out for the occasional pass, recording three touchdown catches. He played well enough to catch the attention of the Indianapolis Colts. But he stuck around for only the offseason. Nsekhe appeared in two games for the St. Louis Rams in 2012 but got cut the following fall. The next offseason featured a stop with the New Orleans Saints, a brief stint with the Montreal Alouettes and then a return to the AFL with the Los Angeles Kiss. In 2015, Nsekhe got a tryout with the Redskins and wound up signing a two-year contract.

"It was some tough times that he went through," says Chris

Poux, Nsekhe's best friend and Pop Warner, high school and college teammate. "But Ty never gave up. He's always been that way. You tell him he can't do something, and he'll try to prove you wrong."

In basketball, Nsekhe at times would neglect his position in the post to guard point guards, just to show his teammates he had the quickness to do so. He even tried to walk on to his college basketball team just to prove those coaches wrong.

Nsekhe's ambition did get him into trouble in one instance, which Poux enjoys bringing up.

"We were in fourth grade, and Ty was a defensive end then, and I was a safety," Poux recalled. "He always told me he was faster than me, if it was game speed. So I picked off a pass and was running it back. Ty is trying to race me to the end zone to prove he could run as fast as me at game speed. He wound up running into a guy and accidentally blocking him in the back. The touchdown got called back, and we lost by one point! I still have to remind him of that all the time."

Nsekhe laughed and rolled his eyes when asked about that game.

"Yeah, that was the championship. Lost it by one point because of me. Second place," he said.

The Redskins don't plan on using him as a pass catcher, like in the AFL, and he will leave races to the end zone to someone else. But Nsekhe sees the next four weeks as a prime opportunity to display his blocking potential and the fruits of his growth in the past year and a half.

Although slotted behind Williams and right tackle Morgan Moses, Nsekhe appeared in 13 games last season. He played primarily on special teams but made two starts at tackle. This season, he has been used as an extra blocker in Washington's "jumbo" packages, and three times he has finished out games for a hobbled starter [Moses twice, Williams once].

Nsekhe proved solid in that limited action, and now the Redskins turn to him for a role of great importance. General Manager Scot McCloughan has said he believes Nsekhe could start for half the teams in the NFL, and Coach Jay Gruden on Wednesday gushed over Nsekhe's improvement.

"He was very raw when we got him," Gruden said, "and [offensive line] coach Bill Callahan has done a great job with him. ... He's always working on his craft, whether it's scout team, in the games he's gotten opportunities. But he's a physical specimen, and he's always made up for his inefficiencies technique-wise with his size. But in the NFL, that's not always easy to do. But now he's got the technique. He's working on his technique, and he's very sound. Plus, he's a huge man and, I think, a great tackle."

Over the next four weeks, opponents figure to target Nsekhe, hoping his lack of experience will make him vulnerable. But the Redskins believe their big backup-turned-starter will play well.

"Ty's a great ballplayer, man," left guard Shawn Lauvao said. "I'm not worried at all. ... He's a tremendous player. I'm happy that we have him because that's a tremendous loss with Trent. But Ty can play some ball. I'm not going to cry, even though my heart still hurts."

RB SAMAJE PERINE

Lifting a car, daredevil pullups: Redskins rookie's amazing feats of strength

By John Keim, ESPN.com
July 11, 2017

ASHBURN, Va. -- Shortly after receiving his new dumbbell set, Washington Redskins running back Samaje Perine, then about 12-years-old, realized it wasn't enough. He needed more weight. But rather than ask his mom for a new set, he found bricks, duct-taped them to the dumbbells and proceeded with his workouts.

And a legend was born. Sort of. His ingenuity, and love of working out, placed him on a path to the NFL. It helped him top Adrian Peterson in one area, lifting a car and becoming an almost mythical figure in the Oklahoma Sooners weight room. One story toppled another.

Even now, his mother shrugs her shoulders at the memory of his first dumbbell set.

"All he had to do was ask for a new set, and we would have gotten him more," his mother, Gloria Perine said.

That strength is one reason why he was good enough that Washington drafted him in the fourth round. It helped him rush for an NCAA-record 427 yards in one game as a freshman. It broke the spirit of defenders throughout his college tenure.

"I remember defensive backs checking out of the game like, 'I'm done tackling this guy,'" said Oklahoma's Jerry Schmidt, the Sooners' strength coach whose official title is director of sports enhancement.

Here are tales about Perine's feats of strength:

Lifting cars: Late one night in the summer of 2015, Perine noticed a woman with a flat tire in the parking lot of the Bud Wilkinson House on Oklahoma's campus. She didn't have a car jack.

"So I just helped her out," he said.

By lifting the car so the back left tire could be changed. Perine's mom said he would only laugh when she asked him about it, not knowing if it was myth or real. But it was real. Perine sort of shrugged it off by pointing out it was "a pretty small car. A Smart Car." They weigh 1,500 pounds.

"If you lift one side, the whole side is coming up," he said. "It was kind of heavy ... I mean, I wouldn't say it was easy. It's still a car."

Perine said he was alone, but Oklahoma running back Daniel Brooks once told Soonersports.com that he saw what happened. Brooks added to the myth when he told the website, "He was curling the car, too, I think."

Perine laughs.

"That part is made up," he said.

Balcony pullups: At their two-story house in Pflugerville, Texas, Perine, sometime around his freshman year of high school, found another way to work out. He did pullups on their second-floor balcony.

"Which freaked me out," Gloria said. "He would hang up there and do pullups, which was pretty scary."

The rails on the balcony did not go all the way down to the floor, leaving a gap so Perine could hang off the balcony with his hands on the floor and pull himself up.

The only thing between Perine and the ground: a flower bed.

Did he ever fall?

"Not that I know of," she said.

Deck of card workouts: Before heading home for a break during his sophomore year, Perine asked an Oklahoma assistant strength coach for a strenuous workout he could do at home. So the assistant, Mahala Wiggins, suggested using a deck of cards.

Every card was assigned a point value. In Perine's workouts, a king, for example, would be worth 25. Whatever card he pulled, that's how many sit-ups or push-ups he'd do. In his numbering system, a deck would equate to 792 reps. He'd finish an entire deck -- for both sit-ups and push-ups. Now that he's away from the Redskins facility, Perine said he'd resume these workouts.

"I always work out when I go home," he said. "I'm never the type to sit down and chill out too long. I have to keep moving -- do something else or I get bored. I eat too much just to be bored so I find a way to work out."

Stronger than Peterson: The one-time Sooner great, and future NFL Hall of Famer, was known for his strength as well. Schmidt said Peterson's bench was about 390 or 400 pounds. Schmidt said Perine's max bench was 440 pounds. That's like benching an average-sized piano -- with a small child sitting on it.

Of course, the 217-pound Peterson ran the 40-yard dash in 4.41 seconds at the combine, broad-jumped 10 feet, seven inches and had a vertical leap of 38.5 inches. Perine ran a 4.65; had a vertical of 33 inches and a broad jump of 9-feet, eight inches. But at 238 pounds, those are still solid numbers.

"The way Samaje explodes and his low center of gravity ... that's what makes him," Schmidt said. "His legs are the size of tree trunks. AD would run higher, but he's faster."

"Samaje is so explosive, and Adrian was the same way. There's a 20-pound weight difference, but the amount of explosion and the amount of power these guys have is ridiculous."

But Perine said, "AP's in a whole other league."

Still, Schmidt said some linemen can bench what Perine does, but they can't match his squat (540) or power clean (380). Perine said he once squatted 600 pounds in high school.

"No one was lifting more [at Oklahoma]," Schmidt said. "It wasn't even close."

Sometimes, when Perine would get in position to lift the amount of weights coaches had placed on the bar, he'd shoot a glance at the strength coaches.

"The main thing is just the look you get from him like, 'Is this all you've got?'" said Schmidt, Oklahoma's strength coach for the past 18 years. "It's hard to explain as a coach when a guy looks at you like that. I thought I'd do something to him, and he's laughing at this."

Perine said now when he does squats, he'll do five sets of eight repetitions squatting between 315-345 pounds and two sets of 10 at 285 pounds. Instead of benching this spring, he'd bench dumbbells, with 115 pounds in each hand. At the combine, he benched 225 pounds 30 times -- only four offensive linemen did more. And Perine said he once did 35 reps of 225 pounds in high school.

"I just see what I'm doing as being the norm for me," he said. "I love the weight room, and I love to work out."

WR TERRELLE PRYOR SR.

Terrelle Pryor uses local workout sessions to prepare for debut with Redskins

By Bill Beckner Jr., The Pittsburgh Tribune-Review
July 25, 2017

A desire to improve and keep his pro football career afloat is what pushes Terrelle Pryor.

Well, that and an outright obsession to be the best pass-catching threat in the NFL -- that's his real motivation.

It's why he wears sweatsuits and wind gear on 90-degree days as he sprints around cones, tiptoes through hopscotch ladders and runs routes.

It's why the former Jeannette and Ohio State star, cut by four pro teams, doesn't get complacent or expect things to be handed to him as he begins his next quest in the NFL, with his sixth team.

And the newest Washington Redskins wide receiver doesn't keep the grinding workouts all to himself. Pryor has become known for posting video clips of his drills on social media, mainly Twitter and Instagram.

This pro career is far from over. In fact, from Pryor's vantage point, it's just beginning. But he doesn't want to take the easy route.

"People ask me about training," Pryor said. "They say, 'What days do you go?' I tell them, 'Every day. There are no days off. I know there is somebody out there right now working to stop me.'"

Despite a fresh, one-year, $8 million contract that came with a $3 million signing bonus, Pryor, in impeccable shape and "The best I have felt," continues to push himself.

"It means everything," he said. "Every day I wake up, whether it's with my son or my girlfriend, whoever, it's challenging myself and challenging people. Whether it's football, every day life, relationships; you strive to get better."

Primed for what could be his best season at receiver since he switched from quarterback, Pryor, 28, could be in line for a much larger pay day with a big season. He will look to pick up the production that will be missed with the departure of DeSean Jackson (Buccaneers) and Pierre Garcon (49ers).

Until then, he'll relish the monotonous fundamentals, many of which he learned from Tim Cortazzo, one of the owners of FSQ Sports Training out of Level Green. That includes catching tennis balls and stretching out resistance bands, also part of strict workouts conducted at Penn-Trafford, Gateway or FSQ.

The acronym, by the way, stands for First Step Quickness, apologies for Cortazzo's connection to Pryor and the work-in-progress move to wideout -- a move based more in necessity than versatility.

"We met by chance three years ago," said Cortazzo, a former standout receiver at Penn-Trafford and Toledo, and a former coach at IUP, Duquesne and Ohio State (after Pryor left). "We were training one morning at P-T and Terrelle was setting up cones. I asked if he wanted some help. He was raw. We ran some routes and when we finished he said, ‘What are you doing tomorrow?’ It kind of took off from there.”

Cortazzo already knew Pryor. The duo played seven-on-seven against each other in high school, and even went head-to-head in college when Ohio State played Toledo.

That fortuitous reunion, however, set up a trainer-player relationship that has helped mold Pryor into something many said he couldn’t be: a receiver in the pros.

“We made it pretty simple in the beginning,” Cortazzo said. “I mean it was what I might teach a 10-year-old to start. It was like working with a blank canvas. Terrelle’s route-running is incredible. He was a freak athlete; he could run and jump and all that. But he couldn’t figure out how to control his body.”

Cortazzo’s goal was to find, feed and nurture Pryor’s inner wide receiver. He likened the opportunity to building a car around a great engine.

Cortazzo and Pryor often talk or Facetime “for hours,” Cortazzo said, to go over what they worked on that day as they try to perfect the basics.

“These are just routes,” Cortazzo said. “He needs to be able to take it to the field,” where, Pryor said, “It gets more violent.”

Pryor, who reports to Richmond, Va., on Wednesday for a physical before joining the team for training camp Thursday, has made a full-tilt commitment to change positions and reinvent his brand.

“This is training at the highest level,” said Pryor (6-foot-4, 228 pounds). “I challenge myself, and [Cortazzo] holds me to a high level every day.”

Pryor said the idea to post workout clips on social media came from Steelers star receiver Antonio Brown, who has done much of the same, turning behind-the-scenes time into an event. Pryor has worked out with Brown — and former all-pro receiver Randy Moss — this summer.

“Why just tell people how hard you work when you can show them?” Pryor said. “I wanted people to see how hard I work. I am going to dominate as this is a big reason why.”

A former Rose Bowl and Sugar Bowl MVP quarterback who broke the NFL record for longest run from scrimmage by a QB (93 yards against the Steelers in 2013), Terrelle Pryor is now, wide receiver Terrelle Pryor.

Once No. 8 on Cleveland’s depth chart, Pryor aims to be the No. 1 guy in Washington.

Last week, Pryor posted a short video on Instagram of him making an Odell Beckham Jr.-like one-handed catch. It went viral and Pryor turned it into a challenge.

“I wake up every day looking to inspire someone,” Pryor said. “And for someone to inspire me.”

Pryor never seemed to have a problem generating a fan base. He was well-liked in Oakland and Cleveland and already has a considerable social-media following in Washington.

Several young fans responded with their own videos, attempting to recreate the quick snag.

“I want to do whatever I can to help kids,” Pryor said. “I want to help get them off the streets; do something that changes them.”

Pryor’s clips are free advertising for FSQ, which works with high school teams and individuals, teaches adult fitness classes and has group workouts.

Drawing attention from some of the league’s top cornerbacks, Pryor caught 77 receptions for 1,007 yards and four touchdowns last season for Cleveland, which pushed numerous quarterbacks through the turnstiles — even Pryor, who played receiver, quarterback and safety in one half of a game against Miami.

How Terrelle Pryor Went from a Failed QB to a WR with ‘Scary’ Upside

By Dan Pompei, Bleacher Report
August 18, 2017

RICHMOND, Va.—“You are the quarterback,” the midget league football coach told him, “because you are our best player and you need to have the ball in your hands on every play.”

And so he was a quarterback—ordained to call the play, take the snap and make the throw. It was he who should set the tone, give direction and take the bouquets and bullets. When he looked in the mirror, he saw a quarterback and only a quarterback.

Being a quarterback was more than something he did to play a game. It was an identity. It was a lifestyle.

Now, the quarterback is running a go route. He is wearing white leggings under red shorts with a Redskins logo that make him look taller than an A-frame ladder. He is covering so much ground with each giant step that it’s impossible to gauge how fast he’s going. He is underthrown—again. But he slows down and makes a nice catch, another big play in a training camp full of them.

The quarterback, it seems, is one hell of a wide receiver.

In 2008, Terrelle Pryor was Scout.com’s No. 1 quarterback recruit in the nation. Among the coaches making pitches to him were Oregon’s Chip Kelly, Florida’s Urban Meyer and Alabama’s Nick Saban. Penn State’s Joe Paterno, then 81, made his first home visit in two years to recruit him.

He chose Ohio State and became a three-year starter and the Rose Bowl MVP.

When Bengals coach Marvin Lewis asked him before the 2011 supplemental draft if he would consider a position switch to wide receiver, the quarterback said no thank you.

His focus was more in line with Raiders owner Al Davis’. “You will be a star,” Davis told him, meaning a star quarterback. Pryor would become the last player drafted in Davis’ career.

When Pryor lined up at quarterback for his first practice with the Raiders, then-Raiders coach Hue Jackson said, “He looks like a quarterback, feels like a quarterback, sounds like a quarterback...”

But Pryor’s pro quarterback career did not start well. He was suspended for the first five games of his rookie year for selling memorabilia when he was in college. Davis, his sponsor, passed away while Pryor was serving his suspension. And Jackson, the coach who thought he looked, felt and sounded like a quarterback, was fired after Pryor’s first season.

In year two, Pryor didn’t get many looks playing behind Carson Palmer. Before his third season, he enlisted throwing coach Tom House to overhaul his mechanics. He was named the starter and in his first four games had a 97.6 passer rating. But then it was 44.2 in his next four, and Pryor was benched.

After the season, the Raiders traded him to the Seahawks for a seventh-round pick. The Seahawks eventually chose Tarvaris Jackson over Pryor to be Russell Wilson’s backup and asked Pryor to play wide receiver. Not for me, he said. He was cut.

“I don’t know how to catch,” he told Jerry Brewer for the Seattle Times. “I don’t know how to run the ball as a running back. I’ve been a quarterback my whole life.”

He worked out for the Bengals, Eagles, Giants and Redskins but sat out the season. When he visited the Redskins, head coach Jay Gruden asked him to work out at wide receiver. Nah, the quarterback said. The Chiefs signed him in January then cut him in May. The Bengals signed him in May but cut him in June.

Pryor’s accuracy, footwork and consistency were issues.

“His primary strength as a quarterback was as a runner,” says Al Saunders, who was the Raiders offensive coordinator in Pryor’s first season and a senior offensive assistant in his next two. “Quarterbacks who are used to using their legs more than the accuracy of a pure dropback quarterback sometimes have a difficult time making that change to a conventional offense. Terrelle was that way. He could throw the ball a mile, but his pocket presence and the patience in the pocket probably wasn’t at the level it needed to be for him to continue to accelerate his play at that position.”

If Pryor was going to fulfill Davis’ prediction, something would have to change.

With rare athleticism, Pryor was not a typical quarterback. There were more athletes with his size, speed and athleticism at another position.

ESPN analyst Jon Gruden says Pryor is “probably one of the most interesting athletes I’ve ever seen in my lifetime.”

“Freakishly talented,” Redskins receivers coach Ike Hilliard calls him.

After playing against him last year, then-Jets cornerback Dar-relle Revis told reporters that Pryor is “one of the best athletes in the NFL today.”

2017 FEATURE CLIPS

“He’s as gifted athletically as anybody in the league in terms of his ability to move and body control,” Saunders says.

At his pro day, the 6’4” Pryor ran a 4.38 40-yard dash and vertical-jumped 31 inches. He was rated the 39th-best basketball recruit by ESPN in 2008, 14 spots higher than Klay Thompson.

And one more thing. He wears size XXXXL gloves.

Pryor could have been like Tim Tebow and refused to be anything other than what he always thought he was. He could have been proud and jobless. But he wanted to play football more than he wanted to hold fast to the image of what he thought he was supposed to be.

Being traded once and cut three times can lead to hard realizations.

In the summer of 2015, Pryor wandered onto the stadium field of Penn Trafford High School in Harrison City, Pennsylvania, not far from his hometown of Jeannette. Tim Cortazzo, a former football coach who runs FSQ Sports Training, was working with some wide receivers. Pryor recognized him, as they had played for competing teams when they were in high school. Pryor told him he needed “a couple drills” for wide receivers.

After about 30 minutes of work, Pryor asked what Cortazzo was doing the next day. From then on, Pryor and Cortazzo worked for about three hours every day.

“He was so raw,” Cortazzo says. “I treated it like a kid coming up to me and saying, ‘I want to learn to play wide receiver and I’ve never done it before.’”

The first thing Cortazzo showed him was how to line up in a wide receiver stance. Then, how to get off the line. They moved on. Eliminating false steps. Positioning his hands correctly for the catch. How to come out of a break.

At first, Pryor walked. Then he jogged. Finally, he ran.

He stumbled a number of times, though.

“I’d give him tight cone drills where he had to hit sharp angles,” Cortazzo says. “He’d complain about it. ‘I’m too big for this. I can’t do this.’”

But Pryor didn’t give up.

Pryor’s performance in training camp with the Browns that summer was promising, but he was let go before the first game. He returned to Cortazzo. They worked for nearly three months, and then the Browns called him back in December. Being without a team for that period was “a blessing in disguise,” for Pryor, Cortazzo says.

Some special athletes take their abilities for granted and don’t work as hard as lesser athletes who know they have to outwork competitors to have a chance.

The quarterback was not one of them. The wide receiver is not either.

“I haven’t been around many players at any position who dedicated themselves from a time standpoint to learn their skills as much as Terrelle did last year,” says Saunders, a 47-year coaching veteran who was reunited with Pryor in Cleveland as the Browns receivers coach. “I would be walking out of the building late at night, and Terrelle would be in the receiver room looking at video. The next day, his day off, he’d come in with play ideas. He was first one in, last to leave.”

Cortazzo and Pryor studied great wide receivers of all kinds, including Reggie Wayne, Marvin Harrison, Antonio Brown, Larry Fitzgerald and Julio Jones.

“I love Julio’s physical play, how he gets off the press and how he’s physical after catching the ball,” Pryor says. “I love watching Antonio, how sneaky he is and how smooth he is, in and out of his routes.”

Pryor hasn’t just studied tape of Brown; he has also worked out with him frequently. He also trained with Randy Moss.

When the Redskins signed Pryor in March, quarterback Kirk Cousins texted him and asked if he wanted to meet at Jon Gruden’s facility in Tampa for three days of workouts and study. Pryor said yes...but he wanted to do it for four days instead of three.

When the Redskins’ offseason work had concluded and players had gone their separate ways, Cousins knew Pryor was still at it thanks to social media.

When Cousins teased Pryor about it, Pryor said, “Hey you are seeing my movements all summer long, coming in and out of cuts. That has to count for something.”

Cousins acknowledged it did. “It was comforting to know when I was headed to the beach and I looked at my phone, I saw Terrelle was out running cone drills,” Cousins says.

In training camp, Pryor has made a point to sit next to Cousins during evening meetings when the skill players are watching seven-on-seven practice tape. He wants to think like Cousins.

Pryor wants to do everything he can as a wide receiver to experience the greatness he was supposed to experience as a quarterback.

During lulls in practice, Pryor lies on the ground and has someone throw him footballs so he can learn to catch from odd angles. Or he stands and has tight end Vernon Davis harass him and hang on to him as he tries to make catches. After practice, he works with trainers on core strengthening.

He catches 400 balls from the JUGS machine every day.

“It’s part of the craft, and it’s setting the foundation for this team,” Pryor says. “Every single day, you have to come out and work. Success doesn’t just come. I do it for myself to work on different ways to catch, but also so my teammates see you always have to work harder. When you are doing things right, other guys see that. And I never want to get outworked by anybody.”

The quarterback in Pryor still is compelled to lead, and the way he works is a reflection of that.

“As a former quarterback, he likes to take charge,” Cousins says. “Even though he is a receiver now, he still voices his opinion and shows leadership.”

Last season in Cleveland, Pryor still was figuring out how to be a wide receiver, but he led the Browns with 77 catches and 1,007 yards.

In the offseason, Pryor became a free agent. He took a one-year, $6 million deal with incentives, happy to bet on himself and the Redskins.

Jay Gruden said Pryor didn’t have any mental mistakes in his first two weeks of training camp.

It helps that the Redskins offense and the Browns offense are very similar. It also helps that he already has many of the tools to think like a veteran wide receiver. As a quarterback, he learned to read the triangle and study the big picture. He had to understand route concepts and spacing between receivers. He had to be aware of where the safeties were and what they might do and how coverages can change. All of that has been useful when he’s split out wide.

Pryor also benefits from his collection of nine playbooks from different offensive coordinators—three from the Raiders, two from the Browns and one from the Seahawks, Chiefs, Bengals and Redskins.

“It has helped me to play with so many offenses, especially with the way I had to break down offenses as a quarterback,” Pryor says. “I had to keep relearning things. It has really helped me put concepts together.”

What he still is learning is the physical part of the position—getting off the line of scrimmage, running refined routes, creating separation from defensive backs downfield, tracking the football in the air and going up and getting it.

Since throwing his last pass in OTAs for the Bengals, Pryor has come so far. Cousins even has seen growth from March to August.

“He has a lot of room for improvement still, which is scary,” Jay Gruden says. “He had 1,000 yards last year in his first year playing wideout in the NFL for God’s sake. So he probably isn’t even close to what he is capable of doing.”

As a wide receiver, Pryor runs much more in practice and in training than he had been accustomed to. That’s OK, though, because running is what he always did best, even when he was a quarterback.

The way he works out is very different—more bands and light weights, fewer barbells, dumbbells and heavy weights. He has lost 12 pounds since his quarterback days and now weighs 226. And that has Pryor convinced he is faster than ever.

“I will be getting double-teamed,” Pryor says. “They aren’t going to stay on an island with me one-on-one.”

Redskins quarterbacks did not overthrow Pryor a single time in the first two weeks of camp.

“He’s such a long strider,” Jay Gruden says. “It looks like he’s jogging half the time, but he’s eating up so much ground. The quarterbacks float it out there, and he is outrunning them by eight to 10 yards, and he has to slow down every time.”

The thing is, Pryor still makes the catches with those gigantic hands in the XXXXL gloves. “I don’t drop balls,” Pryor says.

It all adds up to a player who has been the talk of Redskins camp.

“I’m truly excited for him and to watch him play this year,” Saunders says. “I think he has no limits at that position. I would think he would have a phenomenal year for Washington.”

His coach tempers the expectations, as coaches will do. Gruden points out the Redskins have also want to throw to tight end Jordan Reed and wide receivers Josh Doctson and Jamison Crowder. Pryor was thrown to 140 times last season, 12th-most in the league. “He probably won’t get that many here,” Gruden says. “You never know, but less is more for us because it means we are controlling the game and running the ball. If you have that many targets, to me it means you are behind and throwing to catch up.”

Besides, Gruden might need Pryor to be his emergency quarterback.

Pryor will answer that call if needed, but he’s not counting on getting it. Not anymore.

The quarterback is a wide receiver now, fully and completely.

TE JORDAN REED

Jordan Reed vs. the Laws of Physics

By Greg Bishop, Sports Illustrated
August 24, 2017

Jordan Reed bends over a metal garbage can, pauses ever so briefly and then unleashes a waterfall of vomit. He immediately grabs a 12-pound medicine ball, power walks over to a steel column and jumps up and down, over and over, repeatedly smacking the ball against the column with his arms fully extended. Then he walks back to the can and pukes again.

Dozens of pro athletes—mostly football and basketball players—drive along NE 24th Street, up Biscayne Bay from downtown Miami, until it dead-ends at the railroad tracks, bright graffiti splashed in the distance. They come to Legacy Fit gym looking for Manning Sumner, Auburn linebacker turned torturer of the stars. Reed, the 27-year-old Redskins tight end, sought out Sumner this offseason, and within three weeks the trainer had seen enough to deem his new client “as explosive and athletic as anybody I’ve ever worked with.”

Reed calls his vomit-inducing power walks a “standard” workout. But what he considers typical, even most elite athletes cannot fathom. For a man of Reed’s size—6’ 3”, 240 pounds—he doesn’t run so much as he glides, swallowing the gym’s turf field in long, graceful strides. He moves faster than some wideouts; he leaps as if boosted by springs; he pushes around 500-pound sleds like shopping carts. Although Reed didn’t play organized football until ninth grade, he has come to represent the future of pro football, both in records broken (numerous) and in concussions suffered (at least five; depends whom you ask).

Reed knew from a young age that he was different—it was evident as he jumped over five-foot-high fences and later when he front-flipped into end zones. Had he the desire, his high school coaches say, he could have played major league baseball or college basketball, drawing from the same gifts he would use to accumulate 200 receptions faster than any other tight end in NFL history.

Today his personal receivers coach, David Robinson, compares Reed’s speed and acceleration to those of 5’ 10”, 181-pound Steelers wideout Antonio Brown (another client) and his body control to LeBron James’s. In other words: Reed, freak that he is, has the skill set of two elite athletes, one who weighs 60 pounds less and another 10 pounds more. “He’s changing football right before our eyes,” says Robinson.

Reed is both the next drawing in a Darwinian timeline and the embodiment of what happens when a sport built on brutality meets Isaac Newton’s second law of motion, force equals mass times acceleration. He’s so big and so fast [he ran a 4.62 40 at his pro day] that he generates uncommon momentum, and that makes him more susceptible to the worst kinds of collisions, the hardest kinds of impact, in ways that smaller or slower players are not. He’s everything that’s beautiful and dangerous about football, at once the future of the sport and the face of what could threaten it.

At Auburn, Sumner played at 6’ 1”, 225 pounds. Today he’d be considered undersized. “I’m like, What are these people eating?” he says. “Did you see [2017 No. 1 pick, defensive end] Myles Garrett at his pro day? I’ve never seen somebody that big and that lean move that fast. That’s just not normal.” Sumner smiles. “That’s what football is becoming.”

Inside Legacy Fit gym, where instructors shout at beautiful people exhibiting bad form on their burpees, Reed’s goals never change: bigger, stronger, faster. Only, there’s a catch. For Reed and others like him, bigger, stronger, faster could be a problem.

At the Andrews Institute in Gulf Breeze, Fla., the most respected orthopedic surgeon in sports preaches from a black leather couch. Things evolve, James Andrews says. That’s life. Andrews, 74, recently found a box of old LSU football programs from 1959, when he was a Tigers undergrad. Intrigued, he scanned the roster’s columns of heights and weights and found that the heaviest player was Billy Cannon, a running back who weighed 207 pounds.

Things evolve. That’s life. But now imagine the next James Andrews, a half century from now, looking at the Tigers’ 2017 roster and noting that the heaviest player was freshman nosetackle Tyler Shelvin, who tipped the scales at 380 pounds. How laughable will that be?

“You’re not going to see an outer limit,” Andrews says as he pulls out his cellphone and cues up a video of 17-year-old pole vaulter Armand Duplantis launching over a bar 19’ 4 1/4” off the ground, breaking the under-20 world record in April. Andrews’s point: A lifetime ago he was a successful pole vaulter at LSU, and his best jump barely cleared 15 feet. “Women are jumping higher now than we jumped,” he says. “People get bigger. They jump higher, hit harder.” Again, life.

Take Reed’s football position, for example. In 1967 there were only eight NFL tight ends as tall and as heavy as Reed is now. That number was up to nine in ’77, 35 in ’87, 75 in ’97, and it topped off at 97 in 2011. It has since dropped as low as 81, last year, accounting for the NFL’s emphasis on athleticism at the position—and that’s why Reed represents what’s next. Tight ends were already big. Now they’re faster and tasked with spending the majority of their time in the middle of the field.

This isn’t some towering pitcher hurling 100-mph fastballs or a 6’ 11” star point guard. In football, evolution leads to bigger, stronger, faster players hurling themselves into other bigger, stronger, faster players with unparalleled force. These collisions are often referred to as car crashes, but more and more they resemble tractor trailers with Lamborghini engines ramming each other at top speed.

During an NFL season Andrews says he spends his Mondays “picking up the wreckage” from the weekend, his phone ringing from sunrise to sunset with news of various injuries. Legislate violence out of the game all you want, but men like Reed still barrel across the middle of the field—faster than their predecessors, more like receivers—where 260-pound linebackers and 225-pound safeties lurk, waiting to deliver forceful hellos.

On Sundays, Andrews views those collisions up close on the sideline at FedEx Field, as the Redskins’ team doctor. He describes Reed as “a hell of a player,” “someone I worry about” and “someone who epitomizes where we’ve come with tight ends.” It’s not just tight ends that keep him up at night, though. It’s all the players with Reed’s body type and athletic makeup: big and tall and fast. Think Rob Gronkowski and J.J. Watt, Cam Newton and Demaryius Thomas—guys whose size-speed combinations make F=MA problematic. “Bunch of injuries,” Andrews says. “They’re just so damn big.”

Which raises a question central to football’s not-that-distant future: What happens when there are 22 Jordan Reeds on the field? “Well, they’re going to tear each other up,” Andrews says. “They already are.”

2017 FEATURE CLIPS

He sighs. “I love football, but I’m sick of seeing these guys get hurt, too.”

One hour after his workout ends, Reed needs to replenish what he so hastily emptied into that trash can, so he settles into a booth at Miami Juice, near his waterfront condo in Sunny Isles Beach. He orders the cod, a fruit smoothie and a side of red beans. Over the whirl of a blender he concurs with Andrews’s thoughts on football evolution, saying Garrett is a “freak of nature” and the sport “is going that way, man.” But he takes exception to the notion the game could outgrow itself. “Football is more evolved than just brute force,” he says. “It’s moving more toward skill. A lot of guys are big and fast and strong. That’s all good. But skills are what set guys apart.”

He’s not accounting, though, for what happens when bigger, stronger, faster players patrol the same field while boosted by today’s year-round training, optimized nutrition and specialized performance coaches. His very story, in fact, speaks to what’s possible, and to what happens when that possibility becomes reality, for better and worse.

Reed’s mother, Karen, didn’t want him to play football. She liked that he worshipped Derek Jeter; she thought baseball was safer. But before Jordan’s freshman year at New London (Conn.) High she capitulated. Within weeks Jordan replaced his team’s injured starting QB, picking up the sport the way a mere mortal might naturally take to, say, horseshoes or pinball.

Even though he was often the tallest and biggest player on the field, Reed fit perfectly into the late-2000s trend of Wildcat QBs. He worked with a personal trainer and stripped the fat from his frame, amping up his explosiveness. “I’ve never had someone quite like him,” says his New London coach, Jack Cochran, who has mentored a cadre of NFL players, including Dwight Freney. “He ran like a tailback, had the best hands on the team and could throw the length of the field.”

Reed reached the state championship game as a freshman and a junior—and then, in October of his senior season, he got another physics lesson. Newton’s third law: For every action, there is an equal and opposite reaction. Right as he earned a scholarship to Florida, he broke his right foot while being tackled, ending his high school career.

Healed up, he arrived in Gainesville in 2009 and in his redshirt year trained as a Wildcat QB and backup punt returner. A year later, as a freshman, he dabbled at tight end, where playing time was more ample, and scored nine TDs—five rushing, three passing, one receiving—to show what was possible for someone of his build. In ’11 he approached his coordinator, Charlie Weis, and had what Weis describes as his strangest conversation with a QB in his 35 years of coaching: Reed wanted to move to tight end. Permanently.

Reed’s flexibility, moving between two dramatically different roles, underscored how the game was evolving, with specific positions becoming less important and sheer athletic ability increasingly desirable. As teams passed more, at all levels, defenses replaced slower linebackers with faster safeties or nickelbacks. Colleges recruited athletes. Reed typified the hybrid movement.

But evolution came with a cost. Reed injured both hamstrings, the result of all the extra running and collisions, and he considered quitting. “I would wake up in the mornings and my joints were inflamed,” he says. “I couldn’t move the way I usually do. I was done.”

Instead he pushed forward, and in his redshirt junior season he caught 45 passes for 559 yards and three touchdowns—then he left school for the NFL. Banking on his raw talent, the Redskins plucked him in the third round.

By then Reed’s career had developed a pattern. The gifts that had made him stand out at every level of organized football also left him vulnerable. His blessing and his curse. The better he got, the more vulnerable he became.

The water boy for Reed’s high school teams later starred at quarterback for New London. His name was Casey Cochran, and he was the coach’s son. Every so often Casey dials up Reed’s highlights on YouTube and sits there transfixed, watching and rewinding. “Most people will never see an athlete like Jordan up close,” he says.

As Reed reached the NFL, Cochran arrived at UConn, heralded as one of the most decorated QBs in state history. But Cochran had already sustained nine concussions. He suffered one more in his first start, in 2013, and yet another the following fall.

He quit football after that, but the fallout continued. He suffered migraines, became depressed and twice contemplated killing himself. He still fights depression and anxiety and says it took three years “for me to really feel like I could function.” It took him two years to watch the movie Concussion; he knows former teammates who avoided that film. He still watches Reed, transfixed. But he worries, too.

“In a lot of ways, football has become more refined,” Cochran says, “but these hits—the size of the players and the way they train—have never happened before.”

Last summer, Cochran and Reed met for lunch. Cochran didn’t lecture Reed on brain physiology. He didn’t tell Reed about his suicidal thoughts. Instead he looked Reed in the eyes and said, friend to friend, “Please be careful.”

Reed knows his own injury history, which seems like the inevitable result of two evolutions—his own and that of the sport he loves. He knows that in four seasons he has never played all 16 games, never topped 14. He says he’s far more disappointed in himself than are his fantasy football owners, who annually weigh Reed’s injury risk against his statistical rewards. When he’s hurt, he feels as if he’s let his team and his family down. “When people say that I’m [often injured], they’re right,” he says flatly. “I understand their concern. I understand what Casey meant.”

While Reed says he has sustained five concussions, media reports place that number higher. He says the first two happened in college; the most recent one came against the Ravens last October, one week after he hauled in his 200th catch, in just 38 games. (He did his best to conceal that one from Andrews, despite the headache.) Most of his concussions resulted from defenders’ blows, but one came on a hit he delivered himself, another when he dived over a pile, “trying to be Cam Newton,” and landed on his head—at least two instances where bigger, stronger, faster seem to have gotten him into trouble.

But this was how Reed learned to play football, how he defined what it meant to be a man. “Whaler Pride is what they call it,” he says, referring to New London’s mascot. “You don’t back down from nothing.” So says the rare QB who enjoyed the Oklahoma Drill, lining up across from linemen, charging and hitting them full force. “I was known for that,” Reed says, his chest puffed out. “That’s how I was raised. I don’t shy away from contact. You’ve gotta take me down.”

He drops eye contact and continues, his voice softer now: “That’s where injuries come in.”

It’s not just concussions. Reed has injured both ankles, both hamstrings and his right knee. Last year on Thanksgiving Day, against the Cowboys, he went up for a catch over the middle and was flipped upside down, landing on his left shoulder. Reed admits he shouldn’t have jumped; were he not so athletic, he wouldn’t have even tried. At halftime he could tell something was wrong, but the game was still close, so he went back on the field. As he played catch before kickoff with Kirk Cousins, he could feel his shoulder “shifting,” his arm popping in and out of its socket. “The way he plays—with reckless abandon and no fear—he’s going to have those injuries,” says Jack Cochran.

The flip side: That game in Dallas marked one of the best in Reed’s career. He caught 10 passes for 95 yards, including a diving one-armed grab up the right sideline in the third quarter with safety Byron Jones (an exceptional athlete who holds the unofficial world record for the standing broad jump) draped over his back. Maybe 10 players in the league make that grab. Very few play tight end. Reed also scored twice in the fourth quarter: once on an out route where he shook free from a safety, and later when he snagged a slant between defenders, inches from the boundary.

In part because of that lingering shoulder pain, 2016 was a disappointment for Reed compared with the year before, when he broke out with 87 catches for 952 yards and 11 TDs and then cashed in, signing a five-year contract extension that offseason with $22 million fully guaranteed. Afterward he bought his mother a Porsche Cayenne, pulling into the driveway with “My Girl” blasting at full volume.

Reed admits he has discussed his concussion history with his family in recent offseasons. But he prioritizes the future financial well-being of his two young daughters—Jaeda, 2, and Laila, who was born in February—over even his own health. He sympathizes with his NFL counterparts who have retired early because of health concerns, but that's not him. Not yet.

He reasons that he'll never make more money than he earns now, in his NFL prime, and he falls back on typical football rationalizations about enduring concussions: Life is dangerous; an office worker can suffer from hip pain, or a construction worker might break bones before returning to work. . . .

None of that changes physics. For all that football has evolved, the attitudes surrounding the game aren't all that different than they were 50 years ago. "If I have another [concussion], maybe I'll consider doing something else," he says. "But for the time being, I'm perfectly comfortable where I'm at."

Back at the gym, Reed heads outside and mixes jumpers and dunks on the painted-blue basketball court near the railroad tracks out back.

A week earlier, at a camp organized by former Buccaneers coach Jon Gruden, he worked on routes with Cousins, whom Reed calls "my guy" and who he says "definitely deserves" a lucrative long-term contract. Reed is animated in defending his QB, his hand slapping the table as he notes the paucity of elite signal-callers. He says Cousins "has done everything he can to prove himself." But he also says it's not his business to tell the Redskins what to do.

With Cousins's top two wide receiver threats, DeSean Jackson and Pierre Garçon, having departed in free agency this offseason, the QB's success—financially and on the field—may hinge on the health of a man whose career is defined by the line between gift and curse. Over the past two seasons the Redskins are 2-4 when Reed has sat out, and 6-2-1 when he's gained more than 75 receiving yards. He's such an integral part of Washington's offense that when the wideouts bolted, coach Jay Gruden felt compelled to point out that his offense "runs through Jordan Reed."

Still, in March the Redskins re-signed tight end Vernon Davis (another athletic marvel at 6' 3", 250 pounds), partly as an expense-insured policy on their Pro Bowl starter. That transaction underscored what Gruden told Reed at camp: He needed to "play smarter and avoid some of those hits."

Reed's mission in 2017 is to compete in 16 games for the first time. And yet his greater goal hasn't changed: bigger, stronger, faster. "This season," he says, "is going to be my best."

As he heaves up three-pointers from the left wing, he calls out his hopes and wishes, a routine he started as a boy. "If I make this shot, I'm going to give all the money I make in the NFL to my daughters. . . ."

Swish.

"If I make this shot, I'm going to the Hall of Fame. . . ."

Swish.

"If I make this shot, I'll be healthy this season and make the Pro Bowl. . . ."

The ball clangs off the back of the rim.

Reed repeats his wish, then makes the shot. Later he's asked if he ever thinks about what might happen if he can't play with his daughters when they're older, if he's not around for their proms or graduations. He answers calmly, with direct eye contact. He says he's religious and puts his life in God's hands. He believes in what he calls the "power of intention." He says he doesn't think he'll have another concussion in his career because he's prayed on it.

He can pray and lobby for his quarterback and thrive under rules aimed to protect him, but his job description remains the same. It's him versus physics, against the laws of motion. As players get bigger and faster and stronger without end, Reed and others like him will continue to thrill a nation of football obsessives with enviable athleticism. The question moving forward: at what cost?

G BRANDON SCHERFF

Brandon Scherff is the best guard in the NFL, according to Chris Cooley

By Dan Steinberg, The Washington Post
October 10, 2017

The debate about whether you take a guard with a top-five pick in the NFL draft — even a very good guard like Brandon Scherff — should be over, according to Redskins analyst Chris Cooley. Because Cooley doesn't think Scherff is a very good guard. He thinks he is the best guard in the NFL.

"Watching this game, and him so far this season with his progression from last year, I don't care what anybody says about whether you draft a guard with the first 10 picks," Cooley said in his review of Washington's Oct. 2 loss to the Kansas City Chiefs during his ESPN 980 program. "You do draft the best guard in the NFL with the first 10 picks, and he is that."

"Good job, Scot," eventually joked co-host Kevin Sheehan, referring to ex-general manager Scot McCloughan, who faced some heat over the pick.

"Good job, whoever drafted him," Cooley said.

It was McCloughan, of course, who took some criticism over the unconventional choice of Scherff in the 2015 draft, when many fans were clamoring for a defensive lineman, and many analysts were insisting that guards should never be selected quite that high. McCloughan has long defended the pick — he recently wrote that it was one of the two best picks he made during his time in Washington — but I'm not sure anyone has ever praised the third-year guard as effusively as Cooley did after the Chiefs game, calling him the best player in that game, on either team.

"Brandon Scherff was incredible," Cooley said. "He was knocking dudes down throughout this game at a rate that I haven't seen offensive linemen knock dudes down. Just pancake blocking, KO blocking. . . . He had great vision as a pass blocker, great protection one-on-one when he had to be one-on-one. . . . He's so good in space when he's pulling, when he's moving. He's so physical. . . . He is gritty. He gets down and dirty. He is technically sound. He's physical. He's everything you ask for."

The folks who re-watch NFL games and pick out noteworthy offensive line plays have also enjoyed Scherff's play in recent weeks.

But there's a difference between pulling out highlights and making declarative statements about where a player ranks among his peers. ESPN's Jon Gruden started the party even before the Chiefs game, saying Scherff "is having an unbelievable season" and that "he made three or four plays against Oakland that are jaw-dropping." And then Cooley took it to the next level.

"You say whatever you want to say about drafting a guard; you didn't just draft a guard, you drafted the best guard in the NFL," Cooley said. "He'll be all-pro this year, no question. No question about it. If he's healthy, he's all-pro, first-team all-pro. Best guard in the NFL. Best right guard in the league. I'd put him up against anybody, and I would not question it for one second."

S D.J. SWEARINGER

D.J. Swearinger's attitude has produced immediate results, on and off the field, for the Redskins

By Master Tesfatsion, The Washington Post
September 28, 2017

D.J. Swearinger has always been vocal. His contentious demeanor existed long before NFL cameras captured the Redskins free safety giving a fiery pre-game speech to his teammates before Sunday night's blowout victory over the Oakland Raiders.

It's been Swearinger's identity since high school, when he brought the same attitude at Greenwood High in South Carolina — playing alongside cornerback Josh Norman. He's just rarely received an opportunity to publicly display this element of his game in the NFL, until he arrived in Washington.

Voted as a team captain before ever playing a regular season snap for the Redskins, Swearinger has finally found a home where he can talk the talk, and walk the walk.

"I think my attitude comes from a part of my struggle, a part of my past, a part of my passion, a part of my love for the game," Swearinger said. "Just put that all into one, and you get me."

Swearinger, 26, spent his first four NFL seasons with three different teams. Jay Gruden is the fifth head coach he's had in five years. While he's lacked stability — bouncing from the Houston Texans, to the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, to the Arizona Cardinals before signing with the Redskins during the offseason — Swearinger has gained multiple perspectives in the process.

As he attempted to establish himself in the league, Swearinger took the time to observe how different coaches and players lead at the professional level. He said he was still vocal behind the scenes, but understood he wouldn't be “the guy” on teams like the Cardinals — his previous stop — with players like three-time All-Pro cornerback Patrick Peterson on defense.

“It's definitely humbling, because everywhere else I've been, I've had to be patient,” Swearinger said. “I always questioned, ‘Why is this dude [doing this]? Why is that dude [doing that]?’ But it wasn't my time yet.”

His time arrived in March, with the opportunity to reunite with Norman in the D.C. area. Swearinger arrived at Redskins Park wanting to not just bring his ability to the field, but his leadership as well. With Norman — the highest paid defensive player — as one of the most prominent faces on the team, Swearinger arrived with a certain level of comfort in Washington. But Swearinger knew he would have to take the time to get to know the players, particularly in the secondary, on a personal level for his voice to carry weight.

In his short time in Washington, the Redskins have praised the role Swearinger has played in mentoring other young safeties on the team, including rookie Montae Nicholson, who recorded his first career interception on the opening drive against the Raiders.

“[He's] just a fiery guy — a guy that knows football across the board, and I love that,” defensive coordinator Greg Manusky added. “I love his spirit, and he gets guys around him to rally behind him and taking us where we need to be.”

Swearinger got to know his teammates, but he also became well-versed in Manusky's scheme. Gruden has been pleased with Swearinger's versatility to play both inside the box as a run defender, while also lining up against tight ends and running backs in coverage. He has 11 combined tackles and one pass defended through three games, but stats don't tell the whole story. Swearinger has helped establish an aggressive mindset on defense that smothered a talented Raiders offense in prime time. Oakland recorded just 128 total yards, and couldn't convert a third down on 11 tries.

“It's one thing being a vocal guy, but you have to back it up with production and sound play and know what you are talking about,” Gruden said. “I've had guys before that are talkers that don't know what they are doing, but he brings both. He brings an edge to him that rubs off on people.”

It's all starting to come together for Swearinger, who felt during training camp Washington would finally develop into his home. As the Redskins prepare for a Monday night contest against the Kansas City Chiefs, where he received his first career start during his rookie season in 2013, Swearinger's production and attitude has given fans a belief he can be a mainstay in the secondary, too.

“[He's] that type of guy that you need to spark things up; you look for that in your safety, and we haven't had that,” Norman said. “Safeties sometimes, they're the captain of the team as a quarterback would be for the offense. You look for that, you and see it and it's like, ‘Okay.’ That's what you want in a guy back there.”

RB CHRIS THOMPSON

As Chris Thompson improves, production should follow for Redskins

By John Keim, ESPN.com
September 5, 2017

ASHBURN, Va. -- The conversations took place after games last season and became almost routine for Washington Redskins running back Chris Thompson. They were part of his weekly routine: play well, receive praise.

After one game against the Philadelphia Eagles, running back Darren Sproles delivered the kind words. Another time it was members of the Detroit Lions' coaching staff. Then it was Arizona defensive end Calais Campbell.

The message changed a little, but could be boiled down to this: You're good.

“That's the type of thing I want and like to hear,” Thompson said. “It's not so much about being feared, but having that respect of guys on other teams.”

Get ready for more such praise as Thompson's role increases and his game keeps improving. That's partly because he was healthy last offseason, allowing him to focus on getting stronger or working on his game rather than rehabbing. And it's partly because of how Thompson is wired.

In college, Thompson used speed and quickness to excel as a back. In the NFL, those traits still are useful, but he has also learned to become more patient, which helped him run with better vision. He's only 5-foot-8 and 191 pounds, but he has also developed into a solid pass-protector.

Thompson's talent helped him reach the NFL, but it's his approach that has turned him into a valuable piece of the Redskins' offense. With quarterback Kirk Cousins still getting comfortable with receivers Terrelle Pryor Sr. and Josh Doctson, holdovers such as Thompson represent a strong security blanket.

Look for the Redskins to increase Thompson's touches. They worried about his durability before last season, but he held up well over 16 games in 2016, receiving 7.3 touches per game. At his size, he'll never be a primary back. However, he should get more touches.

“Last year he was very good in his role,” Redskins coach Jay Gruden said of Thompson. “He's a very valuable commodity to our football team, both in pass protection and getting out on the routes. The thought of him not being around scares the heck out of me.”

The durability concerns have been real. Thompson suffered knee and back injuries at Florida State. He dealt with a torn labrum in his shoulder during his rookie season in 2013. And he needed shoulder surgery after the 2015 season. But he was fine after this season, the first one in which he played all 16 games.

It's easier for a player to work out in the offseason when he's preparing for a season rather than working around health issues from the past. The latter is a lonely road.

“Being around other guys [working out], that motivates you as opposed to coming here and working out by myself [to rehab],” Thompson said.

“It's tough on the mind, too. A lot of it is mental.”

During the spring, Thompson spent one day working with the receivers and their position coach, Ike Hilliard, to try to perfect his routes. The session lasted maybe 45 minutes, but Thompson took what he learned and continued to work on it, whether by himself or when running routes in practice.

Thompson focused on footwork. He said he tended to stop his feet before making a break while running a choice route, where he reads the defender and picks which way to cut. He worked on staying balanced with his shoulders out over his toes. Before, Thompson said he'd occasionally slip out of his breaks. Not anymore.

“He's just one of those guys that continues to work, and he's gotten better at everything,” Gruden said. “His routes, really, are the most improved, coming out of the backfield. It takes some time for those guys to work their releases and work on the linebackers and run them at the right depth and come out at the right angles and all that stuff, and he's darn-near perfected it.”

Linebacker Zach Brown had not faced Thompson until signing with the Redskins this offseason and covering him in practice.

“He's one of the hardest backs to cover in the league because he can stop and go and change directions,” Brown said. “It's hard to cover that guy one on one. ... I tell him, ‘Look, you have to do these linebackers in. If they're playing man on you, ride them up. Nobody can cover you. I said I can barely cover you, and I'm one of the fastest linebackers in the league.’”

Hilliard said of Thompson, “He's a stud. He really is.”

And that was the message Thompson received from others after games last season. In 2016, he caught 49 passes for 349 yards and two touchdowns and ran 68 times for 356 more yards and three scores. Thompson has quietly evolved into one of the NFL's most effective third-down backs.

“After the Eagles game Darren Sproles came up to me and said, ‘I respect your game, I like what you're doing. Keep it up.’ I was like, ‘Man, I'm trying to get to your level,’” Thompson said. “For me to hear that from him, that was big because he's the best third-down back to ever do it. It means a lot."

P TRESS WAY

'It's addicting': Redskins punter Tress Way fulfills dream by creating trivia board game

By Scott Allen, The Washington Post
July 20, 2017

Tress Way loved two things about the Associated Press's list of the top 100 college football programs of all-time, which the Redskins punter came across on Twitter last August: His alma mater, Oklahoma, was No. 2 (and ranked ahead of Texas), and the order was determined by a formula, not one writer's opinion.

"You could not argue it," said Way, who began quizzing teammates, coaches and staffers at Redskins training camp in Richmond about the list and kept track of who could name the top 10 programs in the fewest number of guesses. Everyone wanted a turn, and each new attempt attracted an audience. The excitement over this simple off-field diversion ultimately inspired Way to create What's Your Bid, a team trivia game that combines elements of "Family Feud," Trivial Pursuit and spades. A Kickstarter campaign to fund the project launches July 31.

"I wasn't surprised when he told me he created this, because even back in college he said one of his dreams was to create a board game," said former Oklahoma center Ben Habern, who roomed with Way for two years in Norman. "It was a passion of his and I knew at some point he would find the time to put something like this together."

Habern, the marketing and strategic partnerships coordinator for the College Football Playoff, is one of three friends from Oklahoma who agreed to help Way get What's Your Bid — the debut product from Way Fun Games LLC — off the ground over the last few months.

The genesis of the idea came a year ago, when Colt McCoy and then-quarterbacks coach Matt Cavanaugh needed only 11 guesses to name the AP's all-time top 10 college football programs. Nick Sundberg, Coach Jay Gruden and Redskins President Bruce Allen were among the group who gave two incorrect answers and tied for second place in the friendly competition, after which one coach asked Way if he had any other lists handy.

"No, but one of the good things about being a punter is that while you guys are in meetings, I'll come up with some more tonight," Way replied.

And he did. Way scribbled topics on his Omni Richmond Hotel notepad and helped satisfy the team's trivia craving for the remainder of camp while serving as the Redskins' resident Alex Trebek. By the start of the regular season, trivia had become as popular an activity among players as ping-pong, with questions ranging from the top-grossing Leonardo DiCaprio films to past Super Bowl winners and the 13 original American colonies.

"I got to a point where I probably had three or four hundred topics in one week," Way said. "We'd sit there in the video room once everything was done, after all of our meetings, and we'd play for an hour. We split into teams and it started growing as more and more people wanted to play, to the point where we started making up rules. I kind of added in there, like in spades with a partner, a bidding aspect, where you bid on how many answers you're going to get. If you don't get that bid, you lose your bid to the other team."

The Redskins' most dedicated team trivia players last season included Way and fellow specialists Sundberg and Dustin Hopkins, as well as McCoy, Kirk Cousins, Will Blackmon, Quinton Dunbar, Kory Lichtensteiger, John Sullivan, Derek Carrier and video coordinator Mike Bracken. Will Compton occasionally dropped in and provided "some of the funniest answers," according to Way, while Sundberg was "without a doubt" the team's MVP. Cousins proved to be a fount of mostly useless information, too.

"Kirk gets in a little bit of trouble because he always thinks he knows more than he does," Way said. "If there are eight answers, he'll bid eight, rattle off six answers really quickly and then he's like, 'Oh no, I overbid.' He's very good though. Kirk is very good in all categories."

When Way first mentioned the game to his wife, Brianna, and read her a sample question early last season, she scoffed.

"See, this is why I hate trivia," the former two-sport star at Oklahoma said, "because I never know the answers."

It was at that point that Way decided to create a trivia game that everyone would enjoy, even people who were convinced they despised trivia. The nascent version of the game Way played with teammates was heavy on questions related to sports, history and movies. The refined version would feature five categories: Sports & Entertainment, Science & Animals, Around the World & History, Statistics (General Knowledge) and Food & Drink. The key to developing a more accessible trivia game, Way decided, was finding questions with at least a couple of answers that most people know.

Way registered for an account on Statista, an online database of statistics and facts, and came up with about 50 questions per category. He printed the questions off on corresponding color-coded pieces of paper and laminated them. Way then wrapped the question cards with rubber bands, placed them in Nike shoe boxes and mailed them along with the basic rules to his little brother and a couple of friends. Their reaction to his "janky-looking" early prototype convinced him he had something.

"It blew up," Way said. "I'm getting pictures from my friends and family of people sitting around a dining room table playing this game, ranting and raving about how much fun it is."

Way's agent introduced him to a trademark and copyright lawyer just before Christmas and Way found a manufacturer to produce a non-janky-looking prototype with 100 questions per category. It's no accident that orange — burnt, or otherwise — isn't one of the colors featured in a game developed by four former Sooners.

Way has loved board games and trivia for as long as he can remember. As a kid, he played everything from Monopoly to interactive games such as Catchphrase and Scene It. Wahoo, a Parcheesi-like game played with marbles on a wooden board, remains a staple of Way family gatherings. Way bonded with teammates, including Habern, over board games and trivia in college, and the Sooners would spend hours watching "Family Feud" before practice.

"It was like a religion," Habern said. "We watched it every day. It was mind-boggling how much we were into the show. We'd yell out answers and freak out if someone made a stupid guess or something like that."

As in "Family Feud," success in What's Your Bid depends on every member of the team contributing. For each question, teams have 30 seconds to decide how many poker chips to bid, depending on how many answers they think they can guess correctly while alternating answers. If a team gives an incorrect answer or fails to reach its bid, the chips go to the other team. The first team to 30 chips wins.

Once the Kickstarter campaign launches, Way will have one month to raise roughly $50,000 to fund the project. Those interested in supporting the campaign may pledge as little as $5.

"Tress's goal is to make this the most popular and fun trivia game ever, which is obviously a very lofty goal, but it's something we'll shoot for," said Habern, who has handled most of the marketing for the game to date.

"The hardest challenge is getting it in people's hands," Way said. "It's addicting. The only thing better than trivia is more trivia."

And the only thing better than making one board game, apparently, is making a second board game. What's Your Bid may not even be the most popular player-created board game in the Redskins' locker room come training camp.

"I actually came up with another game this offseason because I'm a punter and I have too much time on my hands," said Way, who described his latest creation, High Noon, as an Old West-themed strategy game with elements of poker. Way said he plans to get started on the design process for High Noon sometime this season. Ping-pong was so 2016.

T TRENT WILLIAMS

A week with Hogs 2.0: Redskins' O-line does yoga, eats vegan and trains insanely hard

By Master Tesfatsion, The Washington Post
July 21, 2017

HOUSTON — Nine of Trent Williams's fellow Washington Redskins offensive linemen gathered around him in the corner of a state-of-the-art gym earlier this month. Each wore gear emblazoned with "Hogs 2.0," and they were here, at Williams's invitation, to work out together, bond and work toward their collective goal: achieving success similar to the hard-blocking, hard-living group that was central to the franchise's three Super Bowl titles more than two decades ago.

But first, the 320-pound left tackle had a revelation to make: He went vegan.

Apart from the nickname redux, this week in Texas wasn't going to remind anyone of the 1980s, when linemen lunched on hot dogs and drank post-practice beers in a lawn mower shed. Rather, the 2.0 version of the Hogs talked about giving up meat; employed the latest (and most ruthless) fitness techniques at O Athletik, a facility co-owned by Williams and New Orleans Saints running back Adrian Peterson; and sipped late-night Hennessy at a stimulating hip-hop lounge.

As one of the NFL's best offensive lines over the past two seasons and a critical — if perhaps overlooked — driver in the team's recent offensive turnaround, these eclectic personalities are attempting to establish their own aura while drawing inspiration from one of the best units in NFL history.

"I tagged a 2.0 onto it because I didn't want people to think we were trying to emulate the Hogs and say we had as much success or we were as good as they were," Williams said. "But we wanted to pay homage to them and let them know that's what we're chasing. We're chasing their greatness, and we acknowledge that they were great, and we acknowledge we want to be just like them — if not better."

Williams invited all 15 Redskins linemen to his offseason home, and all but five took him up on it. The rarity of an offensive lineman camp doesn't escape Williams, who has organized the logistics the past two years. He noticed how quarterbacks often got together with their wide receivers and tight ends during the offseason to work on things such as timing and familiarity. But the same wasn't true for offensive linemen, for whom continuity is just as important.

"If you don't trust the man next to you, ain't got [expletive]," Isaiah Williams said while stretching.

Trent Williams handled all his teammates' expenses, including flights, hotels and three sets of Hogs 2.0 workout attire in black, burgundy and gray provided by Nike. And also all meals, which proved to be challenging because some of the largest men on the team weren't eating red meat, poultry or dairy products.

Trent Williams explained his lifestyle change, which was on its sixth day. The five-time Pro Bowl honoree had recently watched "What the Health," a 92-minute documentary on Netflix that "examines the link between diet and disease." The documentary had opened up his understanding of how humans are the only species to cook animal meat and drink milk from other mammals — which, the movie said, helps contribute to different cancers and Type 2 diabetes.

Fellow 300-pound offensive linemen Arie Kouandjio and Isaiah Williams saw the documentary soon after and adjusted their eating habits. Kouandjio went full vegan, and Williams committed to a pescatarian diet.

"It's kind of ironic because hogs eat everything," Kouandjio said. "They even eat their own kind."

Monday, July 10

The first workout started at about 12:30 p.m., nearly 90 minutes behind schedule. James Cooper, founder of O Athletik and the group's trainer for the week, was wrapping up another workout session that featured Peterson, Green Bay Packers running back Ty Montgomery, Buffalo Bills defensive end Jerry Hughes, Minnesota Vikings defensive linemen Danielle Hunter and Tom Johnson, Redskins defensive end Joey Mbu and Redskins linebacker Pete Robertson, Trent Williams's cousin.

Cooper took it easy on the Hogs 2.0 to start, but shirts and shorts were drenched in sweat after an hour. They ran through a series of drills using agility ladders and cones, with an emphasis on footwork and the fluidity from one movement to another, before moving on to "get-up" sprints starting from a downward push-up position.

"Y'all look like these Instagram videos moving your feet," Cooper said, displeased by how the linemen were chopping their feet through the ladder. "That's not [expletive] fitness."

The players walked off the field and approached four TRX suspension cables hanging off the top of the gym's powerlifting racks. They wouldn't use weights on this day, just their body weight. It followed a session of offensive line drills with George Hegamin, an NFL lineman from 1994 to 2000, and an optional boxing session to complete a nearly five-hour workout.

Former center Jeff Bostic said the original Hogs' two-hour workouts were not nearly as sophisticated.

"We did mostly football-related stuff," said Bostic, who spent all 14 seasons with the Redskins during the Hogs era. "Why are we running miles and miles? Linemen run short things, so run striders. We'd be on the treadmill for 60 seconds, off for 40. And you're running it at eight to 10 miles an hour."

As for diet? Forget about it.

"We were on an everything diet," Bostic said.

Bostic recalled a story of Russ Grimm crushing six hot dogs with all the fixings and a full plate of fries in between practices one day, only to puke it out through his face mask on the field. During the season, the Hogs drank beers in the lawn mower shack at the old Redskins Park after every practice in "The 5 O'Clock Club" with running back and club founder John Riggins.

"We solved a lot of world problems and did a lot of bonding over 12-ounce curls," Bostic said.

At the first dinner for the Hogs 2.0, there wasn't an alcoholic beverage on the table at Del Frisco's steakhouse. The venue might not have seemed like an ideal spot for vegans, but Trent Williams and Kouandjio got by all week on salads, bread and pasta, while the rest of the group ordered lobster tails, lamb chops and, of course, 18-ounce steaks.

After waiters tuned the television to an NBA summer league contest between the Los Angeles Lakers and the Sacramento Kings, the conversation shifted to the difference in salaries between the NFL and NBA. Players remarked at how basketball players who can't make NBA rosters can play overseas.

"They got China, Germany. They got options," tackle Ty Nsekhe said. "You don't make the 53-man roster?" He ended his remark with a hearty laugh.

The linemen were the last ones to leave the steakhouse, cracking jokes and bonding at the table until midnight.

Tuesday, July 11

A laundry cart rolled onto the indoor soccer field loaded with custom Hogs 2.0 Nike trainer shoes to match their all-burgundy attire. It was a gift from Nike to Williams, who spent the previous week at the company's headquarters to volunteer at its high school football recruiting camp, "The Opening." The shoes featured Hogs 2.0 branding on the tongue, tusks on the side panels and a gold heel tab with burgundy stitching to replicate the Redskins' helmet stripe.

Williams called out shoe sizes and tossed orange boxes to his teammates. Just then, right tackle Morgan Moses walked in, green smoothie in hand, chuckling, "Y'all started Christmas without me, huh?"

The joy from these custom shoes vanished once they walked outside into the sweltering heat. They stared at a hill with a Field-Turf surface, 40 feet long and 35 feet high at a 33-degree angle. For the next hour, they ran inclined sprints and both forward and backward bear crawls while suffering carpet burns on their hands.

"Some of y'all came out just to say y'all were here," Cooper said when their pace slowed down. "Let me see that selfishness now."

When Cooper interned for the San Antonio Spurs in 1995, he loved how players would do reverse bear crawls on arena steps, but he thought the consistent incline of a hill would be better. So when O Athletik opened its doors in April 2016, he made sure to have one patented and installed.

“When you do it on the back end of a workout like this, it becomes 75 percent backloaded mental,” Cooper said. “You figure out why you’re working.”

The San Francisco 49ers loved the hill. They’re expected to have their own completed in time for training camp. As for whether one will be installed at Redskins Park: “I hope not. Woooo, I would hope not,” Trent Williams responded, while Isaiah Williams and Nsekhe agreed. “The hill is a helpless feeling.”

Hogs 2.0 left a trail of sweat on their trek to the bench presses, where they worked on strengthening their upper bodies and cores. As they balanced stability balls between their legs while doing bench reps of 225, 315 and 405 pounds, the linemen briefly stopped and gazed across the gym at a television.

“Is Kirk Cousins a Franchise Quarterback?” read the graphic on a Fox Sports 1 talk show. The quarterback the linemen have helped protect for the past two seasons had six days to reach an agreement with the Redskins on a long-term deal. The linemen speculated about what would happen to Cousins and the Redskins.

“He already said he wanted to know how free agency feels,” Moses said.

The following Monday, Cousins would opt to play on the franchise tag for a second straight season. He has benefited from one of the league’s better offensive lines. The Redskins have allowed the second-fewest sacks (50) in the NFL over the past two seasons, and Washington was one of five teams to rank in the top 10 of Pro Football Focus’s pass-blocking and run-blocking grades last year, a season that saw the team finish third in total yards.

This success has coincided with the franchise’s significant investment in the position. The Redskins used the No. 5 overall pick in the 2015 draft on Brandon Scherff (who did not attend the camp), signed Trent Williams to a five-year, $66 million contract extension in August 2015 and locked in a third foundational piece in Moses with a five-year, $38 million extension this April. The team also hired former NFL head coach Bill Callahan to be its offensive line coach in January 2015.

“Even if you’re aiming too high, you’ve got to set goals,” Williams said. “That’s one of the goals we set. We want to be just as good as [the original Hogs]. We want to go down in history as one of the best O-lines to play the game. Whether that will happen, who’s to know? But we’ve still got to plan to be that great.”

Hegamin led Hogs 2.0 back outside and onto the volleyball court, featuring sand imported from Florida beaches. It’s bleached and sifted to a micrometer that meets pro beach volleyball standards. “Where y’all get this sand from?” Moses asked as his feet sunk into the surface. “[Expletive] feels like it’s from Aruba.”

Six cones were spread out horizontally on the court. Wearing socks to avoid burns in the 96-degree heat, they shuffled their feet across the sand while punching out with medicine balls of 10, 15 and 20 pounds. They did it so often they created trenches in the sand.

“I broke through my first wall about two hours ago,” Nsekhe said while heaving for oxygen during the end of the workout. “I done found another wall.”

Following another late dinner at Steak 48, the Hogs 2.0 were running nearly two hours behind schedule when they arrived at the Heights High School track.

Cooper pushed them through three 300-meter sprints, two 200-meter sprints and five 100-meter sprints. He wasn’t satisfied with the effort on the final 100-meter dash, which turned into a halfhearted jog, so Cooper added a sixth “for good measure” before initiating a strenuous, 15-minute ab workout.

“How are y’all going to get to January if y’all can’t hold an ab position?” Cooper yelled. “I’m not being negative. I’m just telling the truth.”

Offensive linemen run in short bursts throughout a game, but these difficult cardio sessions were intentional. Cooper trains NFL athletes with the same approach he trains short-distance runners. He incorporates cross-country during their offseasons, even if they are 100-meter sprinters, so they have enough endurance and tissue for those final 20 meters during the season.

“It’s the same with football. Performance-wise, you don’t get to just burst 10 yards,” Cooper said. “How about making a play and still being 27 yards up the field? Sometimes it’s not where you belong, but other times it calls for it if you’re really fast enough and agile and you can make that play.”

Another scheduled session with Hegamin was canceled, with the exhausted players wary of risking injury right before training camp. Only half the players mustered up enough energy to go out to Vic & Anthony’s Steakhouse, where Williams shared his battles with insomnia. On nights before a 1 p.m. game, there are times when Williams doesn’t fall asleep until 3 a.m.

“I swear I be thinking about football all night,” Williams said.

After the table was cleared, Kouandjio, Vinston Painter, Isaiah Williams, Ronald Patrick and John Kling agreed that he should go see a sleep expert. The conversation continued well past midnight.

“I guess these 9 o’clock dinners are kind of late, huh?” Williams said.

A recovery day: No more hills, no more sand drills and no more sprints. Rather, the Hogs 2.0 were participating in one-on-one drills for the first time in 2017 because the drills are outlawed during off-season practices. The group of players they went against included Hughes, causing Trent Williams to recall how he went two years without allowing a sack until Hughes got the best of him in Week 16 during the 2015 season. On a play-action pass in the third quarter, Hughes hesitated inside, then blew right by Williams off the edge to bring Cousins down. Williams slapped his hands together in frustration after the play.

Nsekhe took off for the airport after one-on-ones, while everyone else walked into a room with yoga instructor Alicia Tillman. They started with muscle activation, or power yoga flow, and finished with deep stretching, called “athletic restore” at O Athletik. Tillman curated a playlist heavy on Tupac Shakur and Jay-Z, causing Hogs 2.0 to rap and whistle in between the grunts and groans from downward dogs and leg stretches using a yoga strap.

“My man over here struggling to get that strap around his ankles,” Moses said as he observed Isaiah Williams wrestling with the yoga strap across the room. The ensuing laughter from the unit echoed in the tiny space, but Tillman later demanded silence and told the linemen to close their eyes.

It was the quietest Hogs 2.0 had been all week. “Nobody was horrible, so good job,” Tillman said.

Once the session ended, Kouandjio quickly stepped out of the musty room and came back to wipe off his yoga mat. “It smells like ... catfood,” Kouandjio said.

Trent Williams Facetimed Redskins tight end Jordan Reed, who was training in Miami, to see whether he was still vegan after making the switch about a month before. He wasn’t, which Williams had expected. Reed started eating meat the previous week because he was losing too much weight.

Williams, who was nine days in at this point, had the same concerns as Reed about maintaining weight, particularly once training camp started. But he planned to remain vegan during the first few days of practice and reassess.

“I’m bettering my life,” Williams said. “I ain’t [expletive] with that animal product no more.”

Williams hung up and asked Isaiah Williams to make a reservation at Yauatcha, a modern Chinese tearoom across the street with just two locations in the United States (the other is in Honolulu). There was a problem, however: Hogs 2.0 were able to get into every steakhouse this week in tank tops, gym shorts and slides, but Yauatcha had a stricter dress code.

Some of the guys wanted to bail and go back to Steak 48 across the street, but Williams was eager to try the food on Cooper’s glowing recommendation and persuaded the restaurant to allow the group in.

“I’m giving y’all a head start so I won’t be embarrassed walking in,” said Cooper, who waited up front as customers were fixated on these 300-pound linemen walking through a snazzy restaurant dressed to play basketball.

“I think I heard people say, ‘Now, how did they get in here?’” Ronald Patrick said.

With the players isolated from the rest of the guests in a private section, Cooper, who lived in China during the 1990s as a professional kickboxer, fielded questions about the menu.

The linemen's palates expanded as they ordered cheung fun, rice noodle rolls stuffed with prawns and bean curd, scallop dumplings and baked puffs stuffed with venison — the last of which ended Williams's nine-day vegan streak.

"I don't know what that venison is, but that [expletive] is hittin'!" Williams yelled. Isaiah Williams caved, too, at the sight of aromatic crispy duck.

"I'm 99 percent" vegan, Trent Williams later said. "I'm working on that last 1" percent.

Williams spent the entire dinner, which ended at about 11:15 p.m., rallying Hogs 2.0 to hit a nightclub on the final night. Some were down; others were ready for bed. A few agreed to do an optional workout with Williams on Friday.

Isaiah Williams, Painter, Catalina and Patrick joined Trent Williams and some of his college and childhood friends at Jet Lounge, a small, dimly lit spot two blocks from Toyota Center, where the Rockets play. Floor-to-ceiling warehouse windows on one side of the lounge looked out toward the downtown Houston skyline.

They grabbed a table next to the entrance. Some sat on the linen couch and two leather armchairs. Williams ordered two bottles: Today's world problems would be solved over Hennessy and Ciroc.

Williams got bumped as two men were dragged out for fighting in front of the section, but he was unfazed and remained calm. The DJ then electrified the crowd with nothing but Texas hip-hop cuts for the next 40 minutes. Williams flung his hands to the soundtrack of his childhood, spanning from Big Moe to Lil' Keke to DJ Screw. He rapped along to Z-Ro's "Mo City Don," the state anthem in certain parts of Texas:

Slow, loud and bangin', all in my trunk.
